

The Banks Were Never the Owners

By Anna Von Reitz

The banks were nothing but lienholders on "house loans" and "car loans" and have no basis for any valid claims whatsoever.

Why?

Because they didn't loan us anything but our own credit, and they took undisclosed and inequitable amounts of credit based on our assets.

The banks are going down for it and they will not survive this without agreeing to lawful conversion.

So.

No worries.

That may be what they plan, but it is not what they've sown --- and they will reap what they have sown.
