

International Public Notice: Why There Can't Be An RV

By Anna Von Reitz

Because most of what would be revenue would be fraudulent.

Because the "Quantum Accounts" are being managed as a means to defraud people, especially senior citizens, of all but a tiny, tiny part of the profits made on the secretive use (and often misuse) of their assets.

Because the fraud and manipulation and commodity rigging of the Central Banks has gone on so long that nobody has any guess what the free market value of anything is.

Read that: because we haven't had a free market anywhere on Earth for over a hundred years there is no way to set a baseline value for even one commodity currently in trade.

This has caused a problem so pernicious that people have tried to invent "new" commodities and float them in the "alternative website markets" hoping to establish just one free trade value for one thing on Earth.

But that doesn't work either, because the people using alternative marketplaces are educated and rich enough to have computers or access to computers, and so, the marketplace itself is too arbitrary and special to yield a fair trade result.

Special Blue-ribboned committees have groaned their way over this for at least 30 years, with no result.

The Federal Reserve System didn't destroy the realm of Free Trade, it just buried it alive. Over a hundred years later, there is no way to go back and pick up any threads.

There is no logical basis for an RV available as a result, and the only way that we can get a logical basis established is to melt the entire central bank system down and allow a free trade economy to exert and re-establish itself, which could take twenty years or more, during which the entire world economy would be in a totally unregulated free-fall, waiting for "market forces" to "peg" the new standard.

We could use the one standard that we have left from the old pre-Fed and pre-Central Bank economy, but nobody wants to do that.

That standard is the American Silver Dollar that started out at a 1:1 parity with the purported value of the Federal Reserve Note issued under the 1933 Emergency Banking Act, but as the nerds (not the politicians) at the U.S. Treasury can and will tell you, each old American Silver Dollar is now pegged against something like 80,000 Federal Reserve Notes due to repeated cycles of inflation.

That, by definition, would make the price of one ounce of pure silver $80,000-whatever dollars, if we were really truly going to use that as a revaluation standard, and unfortunately, because this was the only exchange rate ever established between the Federal Reserve Note and any commodity-based currency, it's all we've got.

If, for grins, we even entertained that singular option in theory, the Americans would be so grossly, wildly, wealthy compared to any other people in the world --- as a result of the magnitude of their losses under the Federal Reserve System --- that it would undermine the whole theory and purpose of the RV, which is, supposedly, to establish an equitable new parity among national currencies, so that we can trade freely without overwhelming built-in structural deficits or credits influencing free trade.

To quote a genius from Haiti, "Sheeet, man, the Americans got so messed up on this one. There is no way to make it right."

Instead of the exchange rate between the USD and the Nigerian naira being 1 USD to 1,443.77 naira, as it was today, November 3rd 2025, the new supposedly more fair and equitable exchange rate would be 1 USD to 81,443.77 naira.

Is everyone finally getting a real good look at why there can't be an RV that makes any sense, that provides the necessary fairness and the volume of trade needed to support commerce worldwide?

If we use just the simple honest math, all the rest of the world would have or hear, would be a giant sucking sound as everything everyone owned, hoped in, or held dear, would be somewhere in The United States, paying back the Americans for what they have suffered the past 112 years, let alone paying what all the other living people and all their various countries and nations are owed.

Today we heard yet another suggestion (and threat) from one of the "Overlord" organizations, saying, there can't be any settlement until we say so, blah-blah-blah and blah, because we are the Big Fish hoity-toity comptrollers and we have the ability to feed back $500T a day into the world economy....

Imagine us in our best Clint Eastwood voice saying, "A man has got to know his limits...." And maybe Sam Elliot saying, "We've been to this picture show before."

The CIA pension fund, which somehow got classified as a humanitarian and philanthropic fund eligible for platform trading under the auspices of the World Bank was purportedly worth something like $5.5 times 10 to the 240th power last time anyone looked. This is what they are talking about when they talk about "infinity accounts".

Please note that there is no connection to reality.

Just like the debt that everyone owes the Americans ever since 1933, yup, sure enough, it's owed. If it got paid, the French would have to box up and ship over the Eiffel Tower. We could have a matched set of French artwork standing around New York Harbor like giant salt and pepper shakers for all the good it would do us or them.

Nobody can pay us back and nobody will pay us back. Whipping and beating people who can't pay us back makes as much sense as whipping and beating ourselves because we were asleep at the wheel and let our actual money be "loaned" out to poor credit risks.

We certainly hope that the CIA is smart enough on average to know that they are never going to see $$5.5 \times 10^{240}$ worth of pension money coming back to them. We really do hope that.

So we are left with this problem, this conundrum, of built-in structural prejudice and long term structural debt built into the world currency system.

Does everyone owe the Americans up the wazoo? Yes.

Does anybody like owing the Americans? No.

Can they do anything about it? Not much.

But we, the Americans, can do something about it.

We can start here, now, today, and do something else, something other than what we've been doing the past fifty years. We can share what we are owed and we can set ourselves and everyone else in the world free of debt. And it won't even hurt.

Guaranteed, we won't even feel it.

We can share our vast, vast, vast, vast prepaid credit resources without usury, without any need to look back.

We can choose and build a different world, based on a different calculus, but it won't be via an RV, because --- for all the reasons cited and more, it can't be.
