

The Divine Web

By Anna Von Reitz

In our recent article addressed to the Christian churches, we pointed out numerous incongruities, like calling a Jewish rabbi named Yeshuah by the name Jesus --- which literally means "I Zeus", and it makes even less sense to associate him with a High Priest's Office in the Old Religion of Phrygia -- that of the "Christ".

Once you know this, "Jesus Christ" doesn't appear to have anything much to do with our Jewish rabbi, does it? So what are we doing, preaching salvation in the name of "Jesus Christ"?

There are a lot of things like this, that just don't add up, whether it's names or scripture, history or doctrine --- rather, when you really dig into it, the whole "Christian" tradition appears to be pieced together like a crazy quilt, with many such crucial incongruities and contradictions.

For insight into the reasons behind this and the roots of western civilization, we have to return to Troy and the blind Greek poet, Homer, some 800 years before Yeshuah walked the Earth.

The crucial part that is hidden from us, is the importance of Troy and the spread of its trading routes and cultural outposts westward from home bases in modern day Syria and Turkey to the Phrygian Empire in modern Romania, Bulgaria, northern Greece, Serbia, Croatia, and down the Italian Peninsula.

When Troy fell the triumphant Greeks did everything possible to erase it from history; if not for Homer, we would have little of it to remember, and we would not know that Rome was founded by Trojans --- even in myth. Quite apart from the Remus and Romulus story, there is very solid evidence that Rome was founded by Romanians who were part of the ancient Phrygian Empire of Central and Eastern Europe.

The Trojans were Phrygians, or the Phrygians were Trojans, however you want to cut it, and these are the people who founded Rome.

Why is this important to Christians? Because Constantine the Great was a Flavian Emperor of Rome, a Phrygian, a Trojan; we know this from the remaining records of Rome and we also have the evidence directly from Constantine's Victory Arch which still stands beside the Coliseum, depicting a processions of Phrygian priests with their hallmark soft conical caps, with the points tipped forward.

This Victory Arch was built many years after Constantine's supposed conversion to Christianity and there isn't a cross, a fish, or any other Christian symbol anywhere in evidence.

Did Constantine convert to Christianity? Really?

The Roman Catholic Church, until very recently (2011) has maintained a bifurcated leadership office, with one man occupying both the Ministerial Office of the Pope and the Secular Office of the Roman Pontiff.

What if these are not simply two distinct offices and functions of the Pope, but are in fact two supreme offices of two separate religions? Christianity on one hand, and the Old Religion of Phrygia on the other?

And if these two religions have been living in tandem all these centuries under one roof, what beliefs and practices did the Old Religion of Phrygia entail?

Their religion was a distinct variety of Goddess worship and the goddess they worshiped is readily identified from representations of her ---- call her Ashtoreth, Astarte, Isis, Cybele, Semiramis, or Columbia. They practiced blood drinking (same as the Scythians) and blood sacrifices, especially of babies and small children, sex as a sacrament, sun worship, moon worship, soothsaying, Tarot, divination according to the stars, and various other beliefs and practices we associate with the Canaanite religions of the Ancient Levant.

Like the Ancient Greeks, they also worshiped Lucifer as the Light-bearer, Prometheus. And Satan, as the sea-god, Poseidon.

It is from this perspective that Pope Francis's reported last sermon telling Christians to pray to Lucifer for true enlightenment makes sense. It also neatly explains the role of the Lords of the Admiralty in recent world events and the commitment of the Deep State to Eternal War--- and all the incongruities about Christianity that can be readily explained, once you trace the influence of this other hidden religion inhabiting the Vatican.

<https://amg-news.com/shocking-revelation-pope-francis-deathbed-sermon-urges-christians-to-pray-to-lucifer-for-real-enlightenment-watch-the-peoples-voice-video/>

Perhaps we shouldn't be surprised. There are, after all, numerous episodes in the history of the Roman Catholic Church that hint at monstrous internal struggles. And dark passages like the Inquisition, the sale of Indulgences, and the present discovery that they have been trading souls as commodities based on baptismal certificates.

The relative influence of Christianity versus the influence of the Old Religion would naturally waver back and forth over the centuries, but this is the closest the Old Religion has come to a Clean Sweep replacing Christian values with their Pagan Materialism.

Considering that Turkey was the home of the Trojans and that it was their staging base into Europe from the Middle East, it makes sense that, at the last, Pope Francis went "home" to Constantinople, and delivered the wealth of the Roman Catholic Church to the Patriarchs.

It also makes sense that the Turks have overrun Syria in search of their own ancient history and artifacts.

See Dr. Lee Merritt's Youtube videos about the Phrygian Empire and its enduring imprints on religion and government on Youtube and at her website, The Medical Rebel.com --- which corroborates our research:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=wzKaMEXKuuU>

<https://rumble.com/v6nzawx-dr.-lee-merritt-and-dr.-bryan-ardis-500-trillion-dollars-shocking-never-bef.html>

As you zoom out to a larger perspective of history, all the pieces fall neatly in place, including the constant symbol of the Fasces, a bound bundle of wooden sticks. You see it everywhere, from the Lincoln Memorial to Botany Bay, from Montreal to Cypress. You even see it in Japan and Indonesia.

It's such a homely, even ugly emblem, but there it is and remains: each stick is not all that strong, but bound together, they create an impenetrable strength.

This is the symbol lurking behind the concept of The United States. And it's where "Fascism" comes from, too. Benito Mussolini was not falling far from his tree.

Plug in the missing pieces.

The ancient symbols tell the tale better than words can say. The Tribe of Dan (the Tuath Danann) came by sea, but the remaining nine Tribes came overland.

Do you now see the Ten Kingdoms of Revelation ---- the Ten "Lost" Sons and their Tribes traded to Satan by Jacob, spread out across the face of Europe?

You can identify them by the blessings Jacob gave to each of them.

And who did Jacob, the Liar, save? Benjamin, Ephraim, and Manasseh. His youngest Son and two Grandsons.

These are the thirteen stars, even though it is also the number of the original Colonies. And that is no mistake. No coincidence.

Who did Jacob mourn? His Son, Joseph, who stayed with the Egyptians; in memory of Joseph, Jacob adopted the name Israel and honored Amun-Ra.

So, here, finally, we see Jacob's legacy and see Jacob himself, a man with many faults, a Son of Sin, who won through in the end.

It's not easy being a Patriarch.

Remember that and have some patience. We're coming down the home stretch of the Divine Web.

Granna

See this article and over 5200 others on Anna's website here: www.annavonreitz.com

To support this work look for the Donate button on this website.