

International Public Notice: DOE in Memorium

By Anna Von Reitz

It was one of those things that should never have existed under our Constitutional system of government, but because our Federal Employees were presenting the Department of Education as a "department" within their system and pertaining to their citizenry and their version of "public"--- they got away with it.

Just like they got away with imposing Social Security --- a Federal Employee pension program on millions of average Americans, just like they foisted off the Federal Income Tax on millions of Americans who had no Federal Income. They presented their "Department of Education" and got away with it, because it was supposed to pertain only to their students and their teachers and facilities they paid for.

Just as with the examples of the Social Security and Internal Revenue, the Department of Education should have had nothing to do with the American School System--- but in fact, it usurped against and overthrew our traditional school system without firing a shot or answering a question.

The question that we asked Jimmy Carter back in 1976 when the Federal Department of Education was taking shape was simple enough: where is your authority to form a Federal Department of Education and apply it through the entire country?

There is no such authority delegated to any federal employee, department or agency; the Federal Constitutions left education in the hands of the parents and the unincorporated county assembly committees --- not incorporated "school districts" or "school boards"

Even the language introduced after the Civil War was foreign and corporate in nature. "District" as in "School District" referred to the military districts formed in 1865; our public schools in these new usurping Federal districts were unlawfully converted and placed under the administration of the illegally occupying U.S. Army and their British Territorial U.S. Citizens.

In this way, our "Public Schools" became their "Public Schools". Nobody mentioned which "public" was being referred to.

Though this was very hush-hush, the confusion after the so-called Civil War hostilities, allowed Tories to take control of our public schools, colleges, and Universities, and nobody was the wiser, because then as now, the American People were simply left uninformed and kept in the dark.

Just as we are still being self-interestedly kept in the dark now by the Trump Administration.

We could do without all the polemics and brow-beating and partisan rhetoric; if people understood that we are going through a corporate bankruptcy audit of the UNITED STATES Corporation, everyone would simply understand the situation, would know that the audits are required by the bankruptcy process, and stop the drama.

Any psychological trauma imposed on the population from knowing the condition of our Municipal Subcontractors is surely pale in comparison to knowing how much of our credit was wasted on graft, payola, and utter insanity divorced from reality.

Community Schools sponsored by local county assemblies were replaced by school districts and school boards, as elected incorporated boards of directors ran for political rather than public offices and deceived the trusting American public.

An era of unprecedented pillaging and plundering of education budgets took rapid hold, the National Education Association and other teacher Unions bulked up to push universal guaranteed tenure no matter how abysmal teacher job performance might be, the federal paper-pushers descended like a great flock of harpies attaching conditions and quid pro quos to every federal dollar and imposing regulations and enforcement procedures to match.

Payola and regimen became the goal rather than teaching and learning with the result that student test scores nose-dived and have continued to nose-dive every year since the federal Department of Education has been in existence. Every single year. Yet, education is such a sacred cow in political circles that nobody -- until now -- stopped to think: this isn't working. We are wasting our money.

Imagine that? Over $500 Billion a year spent and nothing but a hangover and horrible test scores to show for it.

Besides fostering abject incompetence, education under the guidance of the federal Department of Education has become politicized, a feral breeding ground for every whack-job theory and fad that a lazy, self-satisfied, and highly entitled academic caste could dream up.

In 1976 when Mr. Carter created his new federal Department of Education, we looked at each other in wonderment. Was it possible that Mr. Carter couldn't read the plain and simple terms of his service contract? Where did he find a single word in either The Constitution of the United States or The Constitution of the United States, either one, remotely suggesting a role for the federal government in education?

No such role exists.

One must assume then, that the Corporations involved were spending their own money, correct? But no; they were, as usual, not only accessing our credit under False Pretenses, but spending our credit on unauthorized activities of all kinds --- including the totally unauthorized federal Department of Education, which is now mercifully ended.

Jimmy Carter died recently at a ripe old age and has been spared seeing his "legacy" destroyed, though of course it will live on for several generations in the form of people who can't think, spell, do simple arithmetic, or string words together into an intelligible sentence.

Whatever Mr. Carter thought he was doing to "standardize" education in America, he only succeeded in finding the bottom of the basement of the lowest common denominator and celebrating this as a victory. We can only hope that good intentions and creativity can make up the losses for two generations of American students and that from now on, "Presidents" will be able to read their own service contracts.
