

The Flannel-Mouths Among Us

By Anna Von Reitz

The description "flannel mouth" used to be pretty common. It was applied to all the politically correct wishy-washies who "couldn't say shit if they had a mouth full" and who began appearing in larger and larger numbers after the Second World War.

These people are always careful not to offend anyone, to "mouth over" everything repeatedly and never say or do anything that might be considered controversial or violent or unpopular.

These are the people of whom Ben Franklin spoke when he said that those who give up freedom for safety deserve neither.

Most of them are deeply fearful and indoctrinated souls, who somehow imagine that they can avoid being swept up in the catastrophes of the world, if they just sit still and do nothing and say nothing.

Their theory seems to be akin to that of rabbits: maybe if I sit very still, nobody will notice me, and it will all just pass me by like a bad dream.

That's the same kind of thinking that resulted in the Nazis taking power.

Was it Pastor Neuman who, in retrospect, enumerated the list of victims? First, they came for the homosexuals and the disabled, but I wasn't a homosexual or disabled, so I did nothing....next, they came for the Jehovah's Witnesses, but I wasn't a Jehovah's Witness, so I did nothing, and then, then they came for the Jews, but I wasn't a Jew, so I did nothing.....and when they came for me, there was nobody left to come to my assistance.

Remember his rumination, because it applies to every one reading this. If you put up with lawlessness, it will increase. If you turn away from injustice, it will increase. If you think that you will escape by being a milk-toast, think again.

As we should all know by now, that is not how the actual world works. In the actual world, silence is acceptance and consent. Doing nothing means that you are consenting to whatever is coming down the pike.

So all of you "cool, considerate men" who are "hanging to the back" thinking that if the rest of us go under, you will still be afloat--- think again. You will be the targets of choice, because you present such easy targets for the bullies and the criminals.

And they are criminals.

If it offends your delicate sensitives to call for the arrest of criminals and the restraint and apprehension of criminals in our midst, just slink away. Go find a hole and hope for the best. History is not in your favor.

This is a posting that belongs to law-abiding people who have secured their natural and unalienable rights and who owe it to themselves and to others to speak up and to resist evil and lawlessness in our midst. We consider it our public duty and there are plenty of laws on the books that say that it is in fact our public duty to report, to inform, to object, and to resist crime up to and including use of deadly force if necessary.

If all these crimes including identity theft and unlawful conversion of assets and conspiracy against the constitutions and inland piracy and impersonation and personage and barratry and felony level fraud and breach of trust and false claims in commerce and deliberate extortion and racketeering under color of law and abuse of bankruptcy protection and press-ganging, human trafficking, peonage and enslavement are not enough to get you on your feet --- except to run away, that is---- then how much more does it take before you line up for the gas chambers?

You will all just have to sit down and put your heads between your knees and breathe deep.
