

International Public Notice: Freedom -- and the Question

By Anna Von Reitz

For the last several hundred years it has been a matter of open debate in some sectors whether or not the human race has the ability to self-govern.

One side says, yes, of course, they can self-govern. They only need to be taught the principles and skills of self-governance and they will be able to go forward from there.

The other side says, no, they are hopelessly immoral and lack self-discipline and self-awareness. They can't self-govern, so they will have to be governed and disciplined and treated like farm animals or babies, dependent on someone or something else to make their decisions for them.

Our side of the issue has won consistently over time, but each time, our efforts have been undermined by ignorance and poverty, so that no fair trial of the question has ever succeeded for more than a few decades, before a network of self-interested goons have prevailed in ruining it for everyone.

The last so-called "American Experiment" lasted from 1776 to 1860, not even a full 100 years, before part of our government was taken down and the rest paralyzed by corrupt members of the military and equally corrupt politicians in the employ of foreign governments.

So what do you say this time? Are you all aware and ready to accept the challenges of learning a new way of living?

Are the "terrors" of self-governance so awful, that you prefer life as a farm animal?

If you are ready for the challenge of making your own choices, not only as an individual but as a self-aware part of a County, a State, a nation-state and a world, then give your attention to this question:
What do you want?

Nobody in the Nanny State mentality ever asks you what you want, because your needs and desires don't matter. You are a farm animal. The "Farmers" only invest in your health and continued existence to the extent that it profits them. Your other needs, your feelings, your consciousness is immaterial and unimportant, because they are "governing" you and your existence.

To them, it doesn't matter what you want.

To us, it does matter. And so, we ask you to think about what you want, maybe for the first time in your life.

Really. Sit down and think. What kind of world do I want? What do I want to spend my life doing? What matters?

It doesn't take a crystal ball to determine that a great many of us, if not all of us, want basically the same things:

Peace.

Privacy.

Prosperity.

Good food.

Clean water.

Decent shelter.

Clothes.

Tools of all kinds.

Sanitation.

Healthy soil.

Healthy animals.

Healthy forests.
Healthy oceans.

It's just basic stuff on our Wish Lists, and then, there are the other things that, by working at it and choosing our outcomes, we can give to each other:

Compassion.
Honesty.
Integrity.
Abundance.
Kindness.
Community.
Teamwork.
Acceptance.

Love is a decision. It's not first and foremost an emotion. The emotion is the very last step of a process that begins when we accept someone "as is".

The first step is a willful decision. We think about it. We decide to love them. We decide to approve of them, as individuals. We cut them the slack that everyone needs. We commit to their welfare.

And then the thought becomes reality. It takes on energy. It blooms into emotion. And it becomes action.

And that is when the "magic" all happens and we are honest with ourselves down to the core.

What is the truth about mankind? That we are Creators. That we are Nurturers, because we are Creators.

That is the truth, and to the extent that we honor the Truth and honor our creative self and find proper conduits and purposes for our creativity, we succeed beyond anyone's wildest expectations.

So as you are asking yourselves, what do I want?

Don't say, a Lexus.

A Lexus is just a car, a thing.

Think of it in a Big Way. What do you really want? Health, life, joy, the freedom to create beauty, the time to nurture your child, a cadre of loyal friends, a happy family, a safe, snug home? What do you want in the grandest scale you can imagine?

Answer the question the Universe has been asking you --- what do you want? And let your heart go straight to the mark. Imagine the world as you want your world to be.
