

International Public Notice: Good Try, Charlie, But No Banana

By Anna Von Reitz

As everyone saw, Donald Trump offered Canada the opportunity to become the 51st State of the Union. He can do that very simply by making the offer, and the Canadians upon considering it, can take a vote (plebiscite) and decide to accept. Or not.

If they accept, they already stand under the Northwest Ordinance process, and their Provinces are already run under Territorial Government auspices, so all that is needed is for the American States of the Union to enroll them as States of the Union.

IF the Canadians want to be part of The United States, it's as easy as a name change and a few ceremonial dustings of glitter.

Mr. Trump spoke with some pique, outraged by an artificial $100 billion dollar trade deficit caused by crippling Canadian tariffs on American products.

He has a right to be angry. America has been used as the goat by nearly all the other countries ever since WWII.

At first, this was done to help these countries recover from WWII. We bore the economic brunt and provided their civil service and defense services via corporation franchises; they protected their markets and paid a tiny fraction toward their own costs.

These franchise governments in Europe and throughout the so-called Commonwealth have been riding on us like fleas on the back of a dog for so long that they feel entitled to our protection and largesse, but WWII ended eighty (80) years ago.

What should be happening is that Europe should not only be carrying its own weight again, it should be paying us back.

The 450 million people of Europe and the former Commonwealth have not only recovered from WWII, they've found new wars to support in Ukraine and the Middle East, and are hellbent on promoting more war and more self-destruction with forced immigration and population displacement policies.

Apparently, their leaders think that the more destruction they can cause at home, the longer they can get "the Americans" to fund and fight their wars for profit for them and pay their other bills for them.

We have been the Sugar Daddies for far too long, and Donald Trump knows that; he knows that we were supposed to be released from that role thirty (30) years ago, so now, he is raising the flag and letting the freeloaders know it's time to take responsibility for their own decisions and pay their own bills, and if they want to protect their domestic markets, it will cost them as much as it costs us.

It's a simple message and long overdue and it has nothing to do with Canadian nationalism, which is, after all, a matter for Canadians to sort through. No doubt we would all be happier if they got control of their own political process and chose better leaders for themselves, but at least we can avoid paying the consequences of their bad choices.

Now, King Charles is getting into the Act, counter-proposing that "the US" join the supposed-to-be-long-gone Commonwealth as a Territory of Great Britain. Wouldn't they all just love that?

And what, after all, can Donald Trump, as "President" of "the United States of America, LLC" --- a British Corporation --- do, but smile and say, "Right-O, Your Majesty!"

Bear in mind that "the United States of America, Incorporated" like "The United States of America, Incorporated" have all been British Territorial or straight up British corporations in the business of providing "essential government services" and they have always been, in effect, members of the British Commonwealth and have been administered as such through the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

So, to the uninitiated, it looks as though King Charles is proposing that "the United States" should join the Commonwealth composed of British Territorial entities and be subjected to Britain as a British Territory -- without, of course, disclosing which "United States" is under discussion.

King Charles III is not talking about our United States, known as The United States.

He is talking about sharing the spoils from the Municipal UNITED STATES bankruptcy and forging a new role for Britain as direct owner-manager of former Municipal UNITED STATES assets that the U.S.A., LLC either can't afford to maintain, or doesn't want to maintain.

Imagine a bankruptcy sale, only instead of potted plants and aging sideboards, the merchandise is government departments and agencies. In a foreign government, no less. King Charles III is offering to buy his way into a separate ownership role in the bureaucratic mechanisms developed by our former Municipal Government service provider.

King Charles could convert those Municipal services into Territorial services instead, and he is shrugging and saying, "Why not?"

We can tell him and the UNITED STATES Bankruptcy Trustees why not, and it's simply this. Their man, Donald Trump, is settling the UNITED STATES bankruptcy in a representative capacity; he can save or forfeit or dissolve the parts, pieces, and franchises of the UNITED STATES ---including the UNITED KINGDOM --- but he is still under contract to us, the actual Priority Creditors, and still obligated to provide "good faith service".

Would it be good faith service to misrepresent what is actually going on and give people, especially the American People, the idea that our United States --- the actual United States --- was suddenly a British Territory and member of a resurrected Commonwealth?

Hardly. It would be another con job and sleight of hand, attempting to illegally latch upon our resources and our country via Presumption and another similar-names Substitution Fraud, such as we've seen before.

We propose, instead, that if Donald Trump is feeling the least bit impoverished in his position and post, he should liquidate the UNITED KINGDOM, SCOTLAND,

ENGLAND, IRELAND and WALES and go through their books immediately after he is finished auditing CANADA.

If King Charles III is feeling so expansive and wealthy that he invites himself to the bankruptcy sale, it makes far more sense for him to buy back the assets of the aforementioned Municipal Corporations associated with his own realm than to propose to buy -- and misrepresent -- any Municipal assets here.

Come to that, as we are viewing the history and the international law involved, actually paying up the debts of the United Kingdom (Corporation) and Great Britain (Company) and their related franchises would seem to be in order. Also the substantial deficits of the Bank of England and Bank of Scotland.

We, Americans, the State Citizens party to the Federal Constitutions, are owed good faith service in all these matters, and the return of our inheritance unharmed, which does include and is not limited to the return of our land assets that were held in trust while we ourselves were being misrepresented as Federal Dual Citizens and Wards of Her Majesty Elizabeth II.

Lest King Charles III forgets, we are not British Subjects and don't wish to be British Subjects, Territorial or otherwise. And yes, we do get the point of the Commonwealth civilian equivalent to the military Territorial Government. We hope that King Charles III will remember that the Commonwealth was dissolved by his Mother in the 1960s, though the details of this were not disclosed to the Commoners in any of the countries impacted.

As a result the actual owners of the land and soil and the assets of these countries have not taken the action to organize their own governments again, and have suffered an undisclosed British Territorial Military "Protectorate" that has done anything but protect the victims of this scheme promoting a form of Corporate Feudalism.

If we would not willingly bow knee to King George II why should it be supposed that we would knowingly and willingly bow knee and Pledge Allegiance to the Title IV Flag we loaned to our British Territorial Federal Subcontractors? A piece of cloth under our own seal? Really?

The absurdity of these suppositions and the legal presumptions being asserted never cease to amaze us, nor does the diversity of number, kind, and cleverness of the criminal impositions resulting from these British word games.

Still, they are words games and lies by omission, owed as the Scottish Civil Law would agree, no performance owing to deceit properly recognized and objected to.

The Scot's Maritime Law shares the same Maxim with the Roman Civil Law, which declares that: Fiction yields to truth; Where truth is, fiction of law does not exist.

The fiction of the United Kingdom and Great Britain as well as the purported Kingdom of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales has been called out for what it is-- fiction; and, demand has been placed upon King Charles III to prove that the land and soil of England has not been vacated for over 300 years, indeed, ever since the reign of Queen Anne?

Instead of inviting Donald Trump to act as a British Lackey while under contract to serve us instead, it would appear that King Charles III would be better served, and the people of the nations -- both the home islands and territories far afield, would be better served, if His Imperial Majesty came home and acted as King of England instead.

For far too long England has been engaged in commercial war-faring at the expense of its own people and innumerable other nations of the world. The persons responsible for England's bad behavior and lack of honesty have grown increasingly detached from reality, egotistical, contemptuous, reckless, and power-hungry. The worst perpetrators seem to be persons attached to the ancient guild system and outmoded ineffective trade unionist interests.

Ironically, those purportedly speaking for the British working class have been the most ardent advocates of selling their constituents down the road, with deceptive policies designed to cheat them out of their land and inheritances while pursuing crazy narratives, such as "Britain is overpopulated!" when Britain has been in free-fall population collapse thanks to their war-faring ever since WWI.

Yes, for over a hundred years, the people of Britain have been struggling to recoup their native populations and still falling behind, still in rampant population collapse (under population) while these fools and charlatans are preaching a narrative of strict population control and at the same time, importing hundreds of thousands of people from cultures that are not only foreign, but actively antithetical to everything that the British people have ever stood for.

If the Brits look for succor or relief from their self-absorbed and maniacal politicians, they will look in vain, for these individuals -- whether inbred aristocrats or for-sale populists, are the cause of their misery, including two World Wars which the vermin are mindlessly trying to turn into three World Wars under the mantra, "War is good for business."

Forget that it is devastating to infrastructure, and profoundly disruptive and destructive for living people.

Changing back and forth from conservative to liberal governments provides no relief and the British people like the American people observe that the Liberals spend their time in office creating messes and the Conservatives spend their time in office trying to clean up the messes the Liberals leave behind.

In such a system, everyone votes for their pocketbook until it finally becomes apparent that there are some things that money can't buy, and a few things that still are sacred.
