

A Little Reminder

By Anna Von Reitz

The "Secret Service" is an Agency Subcontractor; it's British.

The totally aberrant instructions given to the security personnel guarding Trump at the Butler, Pennsylvania, campaign rally by Kimberly Cheatle require no other explanation.

Just as Cheatle obviously departed from sanity and safety protocols that have stood as standard operating procedures since 1901, and obviously did this in order to leave Donald Trump wide open for shooters, the same Secret Service inexplicably didn't show up for work on a certain November day in 1963 in Dallas, Texas.

They were nowhere to be seen when JFK was gunned down.

The Secret Service has a finely honed ability to be absent, a way of looking away, being distracted, having a training session, walking away at the critical moment, laying down behind the podium, stepping behind a rose bush, not scanning any rooftops, taking a potty break or sliding down a storm cellar----just like their famous General Montgomery, in World War II.

Somehow, they are never present during the fighting, but first in line for the victory party.

The Bank of England is now refusing to accept USD (Petrodollars) ever since the 50-year sole source crude oil contract with Saudi Arabia expired. Canada and Australia are not allowing purchases of Postal Money Orders using USD and not using USD for international money transfers.

When Mama ain't happy, ain't nobody happy.

All this "virtue signaling" and appearance of fear on the part of the Bank of England, silently suggesting that even the American Petrodollar is questionable and not to be trusted, is the backside of the attack on Trump.

Bank of England knows that if Trump gets back into office, he will rev up the economy and drill, baby, drill. They also know that we've got a petroleum basin of light sweet crude oil that dwarfs the Saudi Arabian resources, This immense oil source is tucked along the Eastern side of the Rockies. Trump won't need an XL pipeline from Canada nor ten years to build it. He can just stick a straw in the Eastern Rockies Reserve and all our oil and energy needs will be taken care of for hundreds of years.

God is good.

This cheerful and immediate energy independence is not what England wants for us, especially when they are planning to feed their own people drivel about scarce energy resources--- in order to justify horrific high costs for fuel actually caused by taxes and inflation resulting from sovereign debt that hasn't been paid down in over a century, and which the Brits had intended to foist off on us. With interest.

Bank of England is not happy with us, but then, we are not happy with them. They have grossly betrayed the trust of their business affiliates and depositors and happily robbed the families of dead soldiers. Heck, they've been happy to rob entire countries.

So what's a little acrimony between "friends"?

By the time all the British Bunko left over from the 19th century gets straightened out, my great-grandchildren will have grandchildren; by the time their infamous schemes throughout the 20th century are put to bed, the Sahara Desert will be blooming again.

We strongly suspect that a substantial portion of the billions of metric tons of gold that the Bank of England and its affiliates have salted away, including a portion of that gold left on deposit by Czar Nicholas for the people of Russia and Prussia, will prove to be gold that was stolen from India during the occupation of the British Raj.

We look forward to seeing the quote "little brown people" unquote happily having their gold returned to them.
