

No, I Am Not Arrested. Not Charged. Not in Any Trouble at All.

By Anna Von Reitz

Please, people, keep up and be ready and able to tell others the current news and the truth, too?

If we don't do it ourselves, then it is a given that the mainstream media never will.

The so-called entity doing business as "The United States of America - Reign of Heaven" is another whackjob group that thinks it can own the country of France by owning a foreign copyright to the name "France, Incorporated".

If you believe that, too, you need some serious psychological evaluation and help discerning the difference between fact and fiction--- which is a more common malady than we might like to think, but is still in the realm of mental incapacity and not something actionable under any form of law.

Thus, when this organization merely calling itself "The United States of America - Reign of Heaven" issues a "Warrant" for my arrest, it has the same authority as the Columbus Ohio Ladies' Sewing Circle issuing a warrant for my arrest.

The only possible danger is that some extremely ignorant people might actually believe that this was a valid warrant and try to arrest me. That could be stupidly unfortunate for all concerned.

So, no, I am not charged with anything, I have not been arrested, and I am not in any trouble.

Ditto the situation with Bruce Doucette and the Colorado Nine. The people that I knew and worked with in that group were definitely non-violent, kindly, polite, and not a threat to anyone. However, as I explained in Article 485 published two years ago on my website www.annavonreitz.com, I split company with them when they went off track.

I argued with them, I showed them the law and the jurisdictions, but they were led astray by a man named Michael R. Hamilton from Louisiana, and I could not get them back on track. So, I had no choice but to draw a line and formally and in public sever any relationship with them, which I did, prior to them taking the actions that led to their incarceration and recent sentencing.

Again, I did nothing wrong and I am not in trouble. I obeyed and honored the Public Law and the jurisdictions set forth under the Constitutions. I advised them to do the same. They chose otherwise. I am still here and they are in jail.

It isn't my fault that they are, and it gives me no joy that I was right.

Perhaps as more people on both sides of the issues wake up, their sentences can be commuted for lack of jurisdiction (just as they had no jurisdiction to address the District Court, the District Court has little or no excuse for addressing them) or perhaps the President will take pity on their understandable confusion and pardon them.

I do not assume the headlines to be true or unassailable. A man who can be sentenced to 38 years in prison as a Territorial United States Citizen, can just as easily be let go as a free-born non-citizen state national.

I have faith that as more people awaken to the realities of our situation and the actual Public Law, many Americans who have been accused of crimes and especially white collar victim-less crimes will be released to the custody of lawfully elected local sheriffs, and those who committed no actual crime against the Public Law will be released.

Robbery, fraud, murder, rape, and other acts that actually harm other people will always be crimes, but thought crimes, smoking marijuana, spitting on the sidewalk, having a different opinion, and as I saw in the headlines this morning concerning actor Morgan Freeman--- "inappropriate behavior" --- will go right out the window and never stand a chance of being prosecuted as crimes.

So will many euphemisms and notions of political correctness evaporate in the light of day. People will have to call death by its name again, and embrace truth and common sense again. The practice of trial by popular opinion will come to its well-deserved end, and all those who have subscribed to these egocentric sophomoric ideas may even come to realize that they have placed themselves in danger by adopting and advocating herd mentality as a way of life.

Herd animals have an alarming way of showing up on dinner plates, a fact that those who value being popular above being right need to carefully consider.
