

International Public Notice: Oh, Canada!

By Anna Von Reitz

Facts that Canadians and everyone else on Earth needs to know.

There is a Municipal Corporation called "CANADA" -- Incorporated. It is a franchise of the UNITED STATES Corporation. It has been providing the civil service bureaucracy for Canadians for many years and it is now bankrupt.

Donald Trump, the President of the UNITED STATES (as well as being the "President" of the United States of America, Incorporated, a British Territorial Corporation that has a franchise called "Canada" -- Incorporated -- which supplies all the Canadian defense services) is now charged with auditing CANADA as part of the process necessary to settle the bankruptcy of the parent corporation.

Justin Trudeau, like all the other European and former Commonwealth franchise operators, balked at being audited, but like the various "Federal" Departments and Agencies in The United States (the actual name of our country as a nation) there is no choice.

A bankruptcy is a bankruptcy is a bankruptcy. It's not Donald Trump's fault and neither he nor Elon Musk should be blamed nor credited for what they are doing with the new Department of Government Efficiency.

Trump's comments to Trudeau about annexing "CANADA" -- the bankrupt Municipal Corporation franchise, have to be understood in context. He wasn't talking about annexing your country.

He was talking about dissolving the bankrupt CANADA Corporation, which is necessary, and then, instead of spooling up another dummy corporation to act "as"

Canada, placing the functions of the former Municipal franchise under a USA Corporation.

Big deal. Nothing to get excited about. They would strip things down and simplify the system, plus realizing significant administrative cost reductions, but at least it would not involve a lot of disruption and loss of services for Canadians.

He'd call this new entity something like the Canadian Republic (Incorporated) and life would go on.

That's what he is trying to wrangle out of the situation in The United States, too.

The serious problem with this, aside from a few months of administrative chaos --- which is going to happen, anyway --- is that it would continue the dishonesty involved in substituting a foreign corporation and its bureaucracy for the actual government of the country, Canada, which has failed to materialize even though it has been free to organize ever since the British Commonwealth was dissolved in the 1960's.

It would help to tell the Canadian people that they are responsible for forming their own government and making use of this declared freedom to govern themselves, but that, alas, was not in the late-Queen's interest, so she neglected to explain that part to the public.

Please note that Canada is and has always been a part of the original North American Confederation formed in 1777, which includes our Federation of States, and is equally endowed. Through Alberta, which is the only sovereign member in Canada, all of Canada could restructure itself and could, in theory, claim to be a long-lost State of the Union, issue its own money, and resume operations as a sovereign nation-state.

Canada hasn't been operating as a sovereign nation-state since the 1780's when it decided to maintain its Territorial status in the British Empire, and accept the war debts owed to the British King, but since the 1960's they have been free to make other choices.

As the Fiduciary for the remaining States of the Union, I also protect Canada and the Canadians as members of the Original Confederation (known as a Federation from the standpoint of the people) and stand ready to do their will, whatever their will may be.

That said, it behooves Canadians everywhere to wake up and see how for-profit corporations merely in the business of providing "essential government services" have commandeered their governmental bureaucracy and mismanaged nearly everything--- including bringing us all to the brink of nuclear war.

The various franchises of the UNITED STATES and United States of America, Incorporated, have been allowed to make decisions to promote their own profitability. Unfortunately, the Canadian franchise managers have largely interpreted that as an opportunity to act as parasites on their parent corporations and to protect "their" markets to the detriment of their benefactors.

This might have been a necessary policy in the days immediately after the Second World War, but as all the franchised economies have recovered and the rebuilding has been accomplished, there is no longer any need for the franchise operations to continue in a dependent and trade-protected status.

This is also something Trump has been trying to address.

For the past fifteen years, Canada has inflicted punishing tariffs on products from The United States, often over 100% and sometimes as much as 298% (on American butter), 163% (on American eggs), 100% (on fish products).... and the list goes on.

There's really no reason for this, other than to create an artificial $100 Billion per year "trade deficit" with Canada.

It hurts the American farmers, hurts the Canadian consumers, and is grafted away by the Canadian corporate bureaucrats, thereby damaging everyone involved.

Put bluntly: the sacrifice is being made on the American side, but not showing up as any benefit to the Canadian people or Canadian infrastructure on the other side of the border.

This is the situation that Trump, rather clumsily, is attempting to address. The days when the parent corporations had to bear the brunt of these phony trade deficits created by franchises to artificially increase the "on paper" profitability of these corporations --- are gone.

This is not likely to be a popular message with people like Trudeau and Macron and Merz, who are used to having the benefit of these unfair trade practices. They are even less likely to embrace the necessary audit of their books.

Our position is that the people in Canada and The United States and all the other countries who are impacted, need to be fully informed.

This full disclosure will not cause the panic or violence that some people have used as an excuse to object to transparency. It will give people of each country something real to hang onto and enable them to evaluate what is going on --- putting an end to spurious accusations and suppositions, and promoting both understanding and cooperation.

We stand at the end of an Age, a time when the old nasty Corporate Government model must yield to become both more compliant and efficient, and more accountable. The nineteenth century together with its superstitions and social caste systems and elitism is in the rearview mirror. So is the pernicious and constant practice of lying-for-profit.

The end of one thing is always the beginning of another, and in this case, it is the beginning of an age of transparency, equality under the law, and hopefully, an end to government-sponsored criminality.
