

Our Peacekeepers

By Anna Von Reitz

There are numerous layers of Peacekeepers at work in America; these men and women differ from Law Enforcement Officers (LEOs) and occupy both concurrent and, in some cases, separate jurisdictions from LEOs.

Peacekeepers enforce the Law of the Land in international jurisdictions, and the Law of the Soil in national jurisdiction. They also interface with their counterparts operating in the international jurisdiction of the sea (Maritime Commerce) and the global jurisdiction of Admiralty.

Our American Government has superior concurrent general jurisdiction on air, land and sea. This means that our courts are enabled to judge both the Law itself, and the facts of any case brought before it.

American Admiralty does exist and we do have the ability to consider maritime and Admiralty issues with a few strictly limited exceptions delegated to our British Territorial Federal Subcontractors.

Our Peacekeepers uphold the international Law of the Land (Constitutions included), County Law (Law of the Nation) and State Law; they interface with Law Enforcement Officers in the international jurisdictions of the Sea (Maritime and Admiralty) and global jurisdiction of the Air (Roman Civil Law, Law Merchant) who enforce State-of-State Statutes, Administrative Codes, Regulatory Codes, Municipal Codes, Military Codes, and so on.

The important distinction to be made is that our Peacekeepers and courts enforce the actual Law, while Law Enforcement Personnel deal in Code Enforcement.

Our Continental Marshals are filling the spot vacated by the Federal Marshals Service: International Land Jurisdiction. Their expertise is international crimes committed on the land and soil, including human trafficking, interstate bank fraud, counterfeiting, contraband smuggling, interstate identity theft, credit fraud, embezzlement between two or more States, inland piracy, and similar crimes.

The thing to keep in mind is that Continental Marshals are international/interstate officers. Two or more States or foreign nations have to be involved in their investigations and enforcement activities. They can travel freely between States and carry on multiple investigations in diverse locations at once.

The Continental Marshals can be called upon for assistance including multi-state investigations and armed enforcement operations in their international jurisdiction. They are the guys to call when you need to bust an international child trafficking ring, interstate smuggling, multi-state racketeering, and similar crimes that may be impacting your State.

The Peacekeeping Task Force is similarly an international/interstate organization chartered by our Federation of States. PKTF's job is to network the various levels of Peacekeepers together, interface with and educate new Peacekeepers and Law Enforcement Officers, encourage cooperation and when necessary, enable joint operations.

If a Hurricane devastates a multi-state area, like Hurricane Katrina did in the Gulf States a few years ago, so that lives are endangered, utilities severed, and looting is rampant --- the PKTF will be able to quickly provide emergency communications and pull in help across a broad spectrum of local, state, federal and private organizations, deftly providing for their coordination and service delivery.

If there is ever an armed incursion, such as an invasion through Canada, the PKTF will be able to use their boots on the ground, their ham radio network, and other affiliated resources to coordinate military, militia, and peacekeeper response operations.

Our Unincorporated County Sheriffs are Peacekeepers holding the highest Peacekeeping Office in the country; they literally outrank all other Peacekeeping and Law Enforcement Officers, within the borders of the County they are elected to serve.

In addition to these Peacekeeping Officers and Elected Officials, we have Land Jurisdiction Marshals at Arms who are responsible for the security of our State Assemblies and State Assembly Militias that may be Deputized to engage in Peacekeeping operations.

We hope this gives everyone a clear and explicit picture of the authorities, jurisdictions of operation, and functions of our Peacekeepers as presently organized. These forces are all unincorporated and are operating on behalf of the American Public in the interests of Public Safety.

All Code systems, Municipal, Territorial, Federal, or State-of-State or otherwise, including Administrative Code, function via constructive contract, not law.
