Populating Your Counties as You Populate Your States

There are two ways to populate the soil jurisdiction Counties in your States.

The Founding Fathers started with the Counties and organized them first, and then organized the States. This was orderly and sensible, given that they were organizing in the wake of a land war and everyone in America was then standing on the land and soil.

We, however, face a far different prospect. Nearly everyone in America has been individually and purposefully trafficked off the land and soil jurisdiction and into the foreign jurisdiction of the sea. We've been shanghaied and misidentified as British Territorial U.S. Citizens -- as if we were all born in Puerto Rico.

So we are coming back home from being at sea ---which is a distinctly different position and starting point. We have to re-enter the country via the International Jurisdiction and move from the sea to the land, and then from the land of the State to the soil of the County.

There seems to be a lot of confusion about this, but this is just common sense. You retrace your steps, or in this case, the steps taken "for" you without your knowledge or consent, to get back home.

As each American arrives back home and records their birthright state nationality and notifies their State Assembly, they automatically populate the County they live in, too.

It only takes two people living in each County to populate each County.

So just keep on bringing people home and through the door of the State Assembly and all the rest of it sorts itself out.

Also, ignore all the foreign organizational overlays that have been so generously applied by our run amok public employees -- the "Game Management Units" and "Soil and Water Districts" and "Boroughs" and so on.

Every State including Alaska has Counties, whether those Counties were formally occupied prior to this or not. It's time to occupy them. We do that the same way that all the other Counties are populated --via repopulating the State Assembly and one by one dropping into place in each of the Counties we live in.

We were removed from the land and soil on a one by one basis, via unlawful conversion and undisclosed registration practices. We have to return one by one, too.

This is the Maxim of Law that applies: "As a thing is bound, so it is unbound."

We are coming home from over the sea, one by one, by a different route than our Forefathers, but our old three-masted wooden Ship of State is still afloat and we are bearing for home port.

We, the long-lost Americans, are coming home.
