

Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 --- Reply to Arnie Rosner

By Anna Von Reitz

Stop putting words in my mouth! I never said there was no Constitution. The original one is still in effect---so long as there are any actual American nationals and State Citizens willing to hold the rats accountable.

Read Article I, Section 8, Clause 17. It grants Congress the plenary government of the District of Columbia. So they created the Territorial Government of the United States, and following the Insular Tariff Cases of 1900-1904, they created the Territorial States of States.

Within the District of Columbia also exists the Municipality of Washington, DC---- which the Congress also enjoys plenary control of. So they created the Municipal Government of the United States, too.

And each of these has "citizens"---- Territorial Citizens and Municipal citizens.

We are not naturally citizens of anything. "Citizens" as I have too often tried to explain to you serve the government. "Nationals" are the people the government is obliged to serve.

But you all stupidly claim to be "citizens" and are proud of it, too. Well, so long as you claim to be "citizens" you have no Constitutional rights and never did have in the entirety of the existence of this country.

So far as it goes, everything that they have done, they are allowed to do by Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17. That's what you and the rest of the flatheads down on the farm don't get. And that's how you get in trouble. You constantly mistake their territorial and municipal governments for the republican form of state government that we are owed, and which no longer operates because we are deluded and confused and have been defrauded into not operating our own government.

Though it is our right and duty to do so.

I am so frustrated with you and with them that I could slap you all silly. You are like drunks staggering around raging and butting your heads against the wall and talking nonsense.
