

Review of The Great Awakening Film

By Anna Von Reitz

The whole Red Carpet portion of the presentation lasted much too long, and even though we saw a lot of "stars" they didn't say much, except for one doctor who said, (and I don't guarantee to be an exact quote) --- "They lied. They are still lying. Don't trust them."

I thought that was brilliant -- and succinct.

Alex Jones gave a good "Fed Up and Not Taking It Anymore" rant that put across the urgency of the situation.

Maybe the hardest hitting -- for me, anyway, was a historical film clip of Anthony Fauci back in the 1980's peddling the drug AZT which was introduced back then as an AIDS drug. There he was, touting that it was "safe and effective" --- which it wasn't.

And immediately after that, a film clip, all these years later, and there he was again, calling the vaccines "safe and effective" -- which they aren't.

Nothing else I've seen quite gets across the message about Anthony Fauci -- either a genocidal madman or a complete incompetent, take your pick. I say genocide Nazi scum taking revenge on the world that rejected him and his ilk.

You think it's an accident that he is Sicilian and his name means "Scythe"? Really? And who was Hitler's good friend and ally? Benito Mussolini and the Italian Government.

After all these years a lot of young people don't realize that the Italians and the Germans were Allies.

And a lot of people around the globe have forgotten that there were Nazis all over the world, and even in the Royal Family in Britain.

People have also forgotten that there is little difference in the end result of Fascism and Communism. Both end in totalitarian regimes.

Here's how my Father explained it to me: "The Communists steal everything and then take over running and paying for everything. The Fascists steal everything, and force you to run it and pay for it."

A man of few words. Well-chosen.

The background and leitmotif is a young G. Edward Griffin narrating in a very early video explaining the difference between different forms of government (he explained a "republic" as a "limited form of democracy" which is not exactly accurate) and describing the threats and nature of Communism.

Embedded in this was a lot of ugly material about the Communist Chinese Government and the CCP's mistreatment of members of the Fulan Gong movement and average Chinese who don't agree with their lock-step oppressions.

Dr. David E. Martin made several nice cameos throughout; I wished to see more of him and his information.

Dr. Tenpenny popped in a couple times, but other than a brief cameo and ads for her website, not much content from her.

Overall, it left me cold, vaguely depressed, and unimpressed. I was hoping for so much more --- and different.

Bear in mind, that's just my reaction. It's worth watching if only for the shock value of a few of the cut-aways, but I would never voluntarily watch it twice.

I guess that's the sad part. There was nothing in this film that could serve to unify people and give them the focused inspiration needed to take specific action. It was all just more miasma and disturbing facts --- what I call "reservoir building".

Like collecting water behind a dam, "The Great Awakening" may wake more people up, but it just leaves them scared and milling about, without any real focus, splintered up like little chat groups at a dinner party, gossiping about the latest scandal.

I can hear it now, one woman says to the man at her left elbow, "Do you think the Communists are taking over the government? --- Or the Nazis?"

He shrugs and says, "It's hard to tell. It's the same playbook either way." Then he pauses and adds. "Looks like Biden is on the take with the Chinese, so maybe it's the Communists."

Then the guy standing closer to the fake fireplace chimes in and says, "Nah, this is all coming from Rockefeller and the WEF and they are all Nazis. What do you expect from the son of a Nazi industrialist? That's what Schwab is."

And so the conversation continues without apparent conclusion, as if the participants are struggling to identify "the" culprits, and can't quite come to grips with the possibility that they might have to fight both the CCP creeping in the back door, and the WEF coming through the front door.

Communists and Fascists against the middle.

The Big Grudge Match of the Unhappy against the Unenlightened.

We all have to wake up, that's true -- but once we wake up, we need a plan, a practical means forward, a way to organize safely and lawfully, so the Vermin can't just prey upon us. And most of all, a way to take action together.

Here it is: www.TheAmericansStatesAssembly.net.

See this article and over 4200 others on Anna's website here: www.annavonreitz.com

To support this work look for the Donate button on this website.