

International Public Notice: A Source of Misunderstanding

By Anna Von Reitz

Puerto Rico is and has long been counted among the United States Territories and Possessions, but it is still a British Commonwealth.

And the people of Puerto Rico have repeatedly refused to enter the Union as a State, when this matter has been brought to a vote.

How, you might wonder, is such a situation possible?

In the same way that Canada was accorded equal status with Great Britain, and at the same time retained as a British Colony.

Great Britain itself is a Company, a realm made of paper, inhabiting a foreign and legal jurisdiction apart from the associated land mass, and in the same way "Canada" as defined by the Statute of Westminster issued December 11th, 1931, is in the same papery realm as Great Britain --- as evidenced by the fact that this declaration of equal status is invoked by Roman Statute, not British Law.

So, it is better to say that "Canada" was made equal to Great Britain, but not equal to England, Ireland, Scotland, or Wales.

No wonder people -- including the Brits themselves -- are confused.

Puerto Rico offers a similar situation. Originally part of the Spanish Empire, later taken over by Britain, it remains a British Commonwealth with Spanish

Law. Yet, it is considered a United States Territory, because the settlement with Britain over its direct part in the so-called American Civil War required the relinquishment of "all territorial rights in perpetuity" according to the Treaty of Washington.

Thus the "territorial" part of Puerto Rico was acquired by the United States, but its land mass remains part of the British Commonwealth and its legal system retains the Spanish Law of the Inquisition.

This situation has resulted in Puerto Rico being (and remaining) an odd hybrid of Spanish, British, and American influences, with its government split in ownership and self-interest.

Many people are not aware that while the British Territorial Federal Subcontractor doing business as the United States of America, Incorporated, fought on the side of the Northern States-of-States in the Civil War Conflict (for Mercenary Conflict it was), Britain itself openly supported the Confederate States (that is, States-of-States) of America -- the Southern component of that great struggle.

Here is a very succinct recount of what happened, taken from a dissertation, "Alberta Has The Sovereign Right to Issue and Use Its Own Credit" by R. Rogers Smith, issued in 1937:

"Great Britain had not only assisted the Confederacy from 1861 to 1865, but had joined in a conspiracy with France, Spain and Austria to divide North America between them.

On October 31st, 1861 a convention was held in London attended by delegates from England, France and Spain ; they agreed to a joint intervention in Mexican affairs.

Emperor Maximilian, brother of Franz Joseph of Austria, was to be placed on the throne of Mexico, (while) Louisiana, which extended at the time from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian border, was to be returned to France. The Northern States were to be defeated and returned to England as Colonies. The Confederacy was to be free and retain their slaves.

Great Britain floated the bonds of the Confederacy; the proceeds were used to build the (Confederate Navy Ships) Alabama, Florida, Georgia, the Shenandoah, fast sailing ships and their auxiliaries.

These were built in Great Britain and the headquarters of the CF Navy was in Liverpool, as all the CF ports were blockaded. They swank (sank?) $15,000,000 worth of United States shipping without taking a prize into an Admiralty court, and without firing a shot at an armed enemy.

(That is, a Proxy Navy built by Britain, staffed by the Confederate States of America, Inc., personnel, ravaged $15 million of our non-naval merchant shipping very, very quietly.)

Great Britain also spent $5,000,000 on her own navy, and at the time of the Trent affair embarked 8000 troops for Canada to attack Lincoln from Toronto.

(That is, Great Britain, a Territorial Investment Company, spent $5 million of its own money and sent 8,000 troops to Canada, preparing to invade our country from the North -- thereby hoping to open up a two-front offensive on the Union Army.)

The Spanish fleet, at the time in Cuban waters, arrived to invest (invade) Vera Cruz Dec. 14th, 1861. The British and French fleets arriving Jan. 6th and 7th of 1862.

France supplied 30,000 troops for this campaign.

(It's clear that these European Governments were allied in a conspiracy against our country and against our lawful government in all respects; they were the Investors bankrolling the United States of America, Inc., as an Ally of the Northern States-of-States, at the same time that they were preparing as a consortium of interests to attack our country and split it up along old Colonial lines. The Holy See in charge of the Federal Civil Service stood with the Southern States-of-States in an effort to retain the institution of slavery, upon which both it and its Roman affiliates depend.)

Quoting again from R. Rogers Smith's account:

"The Czar of Russia takes a Hand

Still smarting from the Crimean War 1854-1856, the Czar, to disrupt the scheme of the European Allies, sent his powerful Baltic squadron to New York harbor and his Pacific squadron to San Francisco. His action had the desired effect. Great Britain and Spain withdrew their fleets from Vera Cruz leaving the burden of supporting the Emperor Maximilian entirely to France.

He (Maximilian) was eventually taken prisoner and with two of his Generals, court-martialed and shot.

When Lincoln won the Civil War, France was informed in plain terms "that the United States would not tolerate a French force or the existence of any foreign Monarchy in Mexico". On Jan. 14th, 1866, Napoleon ordered his General in Mexico to withdraw the troops."

You might think that this was the end of European meddling in our affairs, but sadly, owing to the fact that the United States of America, Inc. and its immediate Successor, the Scottish corporation calling itself The United States of America, Inc., continued to exist, we have suffered six generations of illegal British Territorial occupation of our country.

It is interesting to note that absolutely none of this history is ever taught in any American Public School.

So far as our children have known and grown up believing, Britain, France, Spain, and Austria have always been our firm friends, and Russia has been our enemy.

In fact, Russia saved our bacon and honored the American-Russian Alliance of 1858, and has continued to keep faith with this country through two World Wars.

The irony of this is not lost on the actual American Government, our unincorporated Federation of States.

Everyone should recognize that the old European Monarchies and the Popes who granted the crowns of these Monarchs have deliberately sought to misrepresent Russia and to create enmity between our nations, for fear that if Russia, The United States, and China combine, the Monarchist hegemony in Western Europe and their cozy colonialist abuse of Africa, the Middle East, and the Commonwealth countries would be at an end.

This is why our children have never been taught World History, nor even the history of our nearest neighbors, Canada and Mexico.

It's also why Russia has been demonized, though in fact, it has been our closest friend and most reliable Ally.
