

A Timely Repost Concerning "Insurrection"

By Anna Von Reitz

With politicians in the District of Columbia throwing the words "Insurrection" and "Sedition" around like popcorn kernels, and the January 6th Visitors (I decline the Mainstream Media label, "Protestors") being accused of these serious crimes, this is a timely posting of the rewritten (circa 1954) Insurrection Act, so that people can get a better idea of what "insurrection" and "sedition" and "misprision of treason" and other such arcane words mean.

I also mean for everyone to know what to do in the event that you become aware of any such nefarious activities, because it is your duty to inform certain officials if you become aware of these "crimes of state".

What is problematic in these recitations is, as always, which "United States" is being referenced? The verbiage runs "the United States", but that same verbiage has been used in so many different contexts and holds so many different meanings, it is necessary to nail down the specifics in the definitions section of the Act.

We can tell you from long practice and the time period involved, that in 1954, the phrase "the United States" in Federal Code generally means the Municipal United States Government, while The United States is and remains the name of this country as a nation-state in proper English.

The entity being protected, then, is not this country and not its national government. It's the Municipal Federal Subcontractor and its government that is mistakenly or additionally being protected by the Territorial Government's Insurrection Act.

Please note that from 1776 onward, the Union States did business as "the United States" and continued to do so until 1851, when they began operating as The United States. In 1790 the Municipal Government also started doing business as "the United States" when they exercised delegated powers.

From 1787 to 1861, the Federal Republic did business as the States of America, but its citizens were known as United States Citizens, as opposed to U.S. (Territorial) Citizens, which also causes some confusion about which "United States" is being referenced.

You will also note that our assemblies are not included in the list of organizations subject to the Insurrection Act and its reporting requirements --- for the simple reason that our State Assemblies are guaranteed the right to peaceably assemble and can't be overruled by our own employees.

With these issues flagged and noted, please familiarize yourself with another Federal oxymoron: "civilian military", which they used in this Act and in several other Acts to describe civilians acting as Uniformed Officers (doctors, lawyers, dentists, etc.) and Federal Employees other than military employees.

Remember that charges such as "seditious conspiracy" have often been applied when people have made "contingency plans" involving Federal Officials, especially Federal Judges, who are equated in these subsections with the government of the United States.

According to the Federales, "sedition" and "seditious conspiracy" can be mere thought crimes, and any transgression impeding the operations of the United States Government, say, interrupting court proceedings, can be painted with the same brush.

As a result, the Insurrection Act is one of the most dangerous pieces of legislation ever passed in terms of abridging and denying the rights of free speech and association. And while it is meant to be applied to Federal employees and their dependents, it is often gratuitously misapplied to Americans merely presumed to be Federal citizens.

Another very destructive and dangerous piece of legislation that is routinely misapplied is the National Defense Authorization Act, which grants the Federal Corporations carte blanche to trample the Constitutional Guarantees and Natural Rights of Federal Corporation Employees --- and is often misapplied to average Americans, too.
