

On Becoming True Followers -- and Journalists

By Anna Von Reitz

I appreciate the efforts of so many, many people worldwide taking up the task and carrying the water for all the crooked, bought off and brainless "professional journalists" of the world, but we all need to become competent at the job(s) we have taken on, and pull together for Truth.

Show a little reasoning and circumspection and skepticism when stories are presented to you. Don't just blatt out whatever comes across your desk. That only compounds the confusion and the problems that we all have to deal with, and it undermines both progress and the credibility of the Alt Press.

It's okay to go "out there" when you know that you are telling the truth, but at least stand ready to intelligently evaluate things before you start spreading alarms.

I am probably the first person in American history to openly and in public observe that The Holy Bible can be read in two distinctly different ways.

Read one way, the Bible is the story of creation, often told in parables and allegories, but told in a heart-warming way as a love story, between the True God and his creation. Complete with stormy nights, betrayals, and arguments, rescues, and unconditional love, this reading of the Bible gives us heroes and inspiration and guidance for our lives on Earth.

Read another way, the Bible is the history of Satan and his vain religion of idolatry and shame. From this reading, we see the plots and plans and motivations of this enemy and his swarms of devotees practicing evil on the Earth -- temple prostitution, human sacrifice, murder of babies, idolatry, the practice of lying as an art form, use of drugs, especially snake venom, to promote "religious" hallucinations, spellcasting and all the rest of the Satanic clap-trap.

Should it surprise us, then, that depending on your viewpoint, who you are, and how you read it, the Bible is a very different book?

From the standpoint of the Satanists among us, Yeshuah (Jesus) is a bad guy. He overturned their whole Empire of death and idolatry and fear and ignorance and ill-gotten wealth and coercive power.

Yeah, he's bad alright. The baddest.

Imagine my grim amusement to see a blockbuster story from the "Christian" ebh.club spreading the news that Jesus is a bad guy?

They are parroting the Satanist viewpoint, buying in hook, line, and sinker, and presenting this as Big News to their readers.

No doubt, they are seeing the "other" interpretation of the Bible for the first time, and forgetting about their own version of the story, in which Jesus is the hero of all heroes.

The same thing happens when people read Federal Code.

From THEIR side of things, that is, from the perspective of the weird District of Columbia world, we are considered "non-resident aliens".

From our side, they are public employees.

You have to become aware of the context of things, or you can't correctly interpret where all this crappola is coming from.

For anyone who is a true Follower of Jesus, the perspective of the Liars among us is a known quantity. We know it. We don't agree.

We think that the evils of idolatry, lies, illicit drug use, disrespect for life, and the other ideas and practices associated with Satan speak for themselves, and we are proud --- proud! --- to take our stand with Jesus against them.

And we know where the bunk is coming from, because just like Britain, Satan is always at the bottom of the dog pile.

Someone had better drop a dime on the ebh.club.
