

International Public Claim -- Two Sides to Every Story

By Anna Von Reitz

Yesterday, we reviewed the situation at the end of the American Civil War, how it opened up a vacuum of power that our foreign governmental services subcontractors sought to exploit under conditions of secrecy, and how that led to further corruption, wrong-doing, abuse, and misrepresentation of average Americans and their peaceful civilian government.

We ended by asking Andrew Bailey, the director in charge of the Bank of England, to return the $33 Trillion Dollars in gold, plus interest, which is the corpus of the Guadalupe Hidalgo Treaty Trust established by the Government of Spain for the benefit of the seven (7) Western States ultimately transferred to The United States by Spain.

The trust began as a traditional government bond program during the days when Spain claimed the land and soil of these beneficiary States of the Union.

The bonds were issued with the proviso that the holders could redeem them as land or as gold.

Once Spain lost the land interest, the bonds could only be redeemed in gold. To close out its obligations with respect to their administration, the Spanish Government allocated gold bullion sufficient to pay off the bonds and established the Guadalupe Hidalgo Treaty Trust in the Bank of Mexico.

The Spanish Government realized that our actual government was not in Session, and did not trust the political status of the States nor the Municipal Corporations acting "as" the United States, Inc. and the United States of America, Inc., and even The United States of America, Inc.

Indeed, the political status of the Western States remained at issue for decades, waiting for the actual Americans to declare their political status, raise their State Assemblies, bring their government into Session and finally enroll the Western States as States of the Union.

This was finally accomplished as of the first of October 2020. All the years prior the Western States existed under Territorial Statehood -- or as we called them, "States-in-Waiting". They are now States of the Union, and fully empowered.

Likewise, the American Federation of States is fully empowered and in control of the Land Jurisdiction owed to this country. We are the legitimate Public Trustee enabled to receive and conduct international business in actual assets and asset-backed currencies, and as such, we have asked Mr. Bailey to expedite the transfer of the Guadalupe Hidalgo Treaty Trust Assets to us, via our chartered International Trade Bank, dba, The Global Family International Trade Bank.

Our role as the Public Trustee for the Treaty Trust is to work with the beneficiaries, who are the individual States and the living people within their borders, to see to it that this venerable Trust and its assets are used as the Spanish Government intended, to improve the infrastructure of the States and the lives of the people.

The Bank of England took a proprietary interest as a self-declared custodian in recent years and must now kindly step aside and honor the interests of the actual Public Trustee and the intended Beneficiaries.

We anticipate that these gold assets and the interest generated from them for more than a hundred years will be used to renovate and replace and improve aging infrastructure, create new water resource capabilities, revitalize schools and hospitals, and open up a host of accessible new integrated medical and traditional health initiatives, and a great deal more. These investments will vastly improve the lives of people living in these States.

We thank and are grateful to the Government and the people of Spain who made this possible for their progeny still living in the Western States and all the other people, the children of the pioneer cowboys and gold miners, the children of the Chinese immigrants and of course, the Native people of these States, who will all benefit directly.

We especially thank the Spanish Government for its wisdom and honesty and long refusal to mistake Municipal Corporations for our Government.

Now Mr. Bailey and the Board of Governors of the Bank of England need to do their part and recognize their unauthorized position as persons merely presumed to be acting as our custodians and agents in this matter.

Otherwise, they would be guilty of surreptitious theft, false claims in commerce, and would be acting as Executors de Son Tort at a National and International level.

We would encourage everyone concerned to be of good cheer and stay calm, as these and other issues remain to be resolved primarily within the international and commercial banking systems.

We all need to understand that we have more than 150 years worth of such housekeeping to do, and this is only the beginning of a peaceful public recoument process among responsible Principals.

We must also understand and keep separate the effects of a global population collapse which is now fully underway.

The capital investments made now will reflect resources deployed to absorb the losses and damages made inevitable by the population collapse, to prolong the lives of our seniors, to heal the lives of the sick and dying, and to provide a far better future for all our children.
