

International Public Notice: About Ukraine Billings and the Federal Republic

By Anna Von Reitz

Please note: The American Government and The United States Government are two separate things.

The American Government stands under The Unanimous Declaration of Independence; so do the sovereign states of the Union, the States of our Federation, and so did the American States-of-States that belonged to the Confederation.

Got that?

The American Government consists of the Union and its States (often appearing as "states"), the Federation and its States, and the Confederation and its American States of States--- if the Confederation were still standing, which it is not.

So we are left with only the Union States (shown as "states" in many publications) and the Federation States in operation today. The Union States hold the soil jurisdiction of our nation through all their member counties. The Federation States hold the international land jurisdiction belonging to each physically described State.

If the Confederation was still functioning, its States of States, such as The State of New Hampshire and The State of Georgia, would be in evidence, but they are not.

Instead, we see British Territorial organizations doing business as the State of New Hampshire and the State of Georgia, usurping against our lawful American States and Government.

The Union, the Federation, and the Confederation are and have always been the American Government. They all stand or stood, in the case of the Confederation, under The Unanimous Declaration of Independence.

The only people serving the American Government as Citizens are the State Citizens of the member States of the Union. State Citizens renounce loyalty to any other government but their own State Government and serve no others.

That's Part One to know, repeat, memorize, pass on, map out and realize -- by golly, that's all under The Unanimous Declaration of Independence! No mention of any "Constitution" at all. No District of Columbia. No Washington, DC. Just the States of the Union.

The Union did business as: (1) the United States from 1776 to 1851 when the name changed to The United States, (2) The United States of America (1776 - present), (3) and the States of America (1781 to 1861).

Knowing this, you can see that "The Constitution for the united States of America" issued in 1787 was awarded to the American Confederation of States.

Now we get to Part 2 -- The United States Government also known as the Federal Government.

The Federal Government consists of three (3) Federal Subcontractors operating under three Constitutions, issued in 1787, 1789, and 1790 respectively.

These Federal entities all operate out of the District of Columbia, share the Federal Capitol, Washington, DC, and work in international or global jurisdiction --and have nothing to do with our land and soil at all.

These Federal entities each have citizens of one kind or another: United States Citizens, U.S. Citizens, and Municipal citizens of the United States.

United States Citizens, sometimes described as "American Nationals" are defined in the very first Immigration and Naturalization Act and codified in the United States Statutes-at-Large. They underwent a lengthy process to attain this variety of Citizenship and went to work for the American Federal Republic upon completion and served under The Constitution for the united States of America issued in 1787.

U.S. Citizens were military subcontractors who served under the British Territorial United States Government and The Constitution of the United States of America issued in 1789.

(Don't be confused by semantics -- this is a separate foreign corporation, the United States of America, Incorporated, not the American Federation of States doing business as The United States of America which is an unincorporated Holding Company.)

Municipal citizens of the United States were and are foreign Federal Civil Service workers serving under The Constitution of the United States issued in 1790.

So you had four (4) kinds of citizenry in play in international and global venues prior to the Civil War:

(1) State Citizens serving their States, which were all State Members of the Federation of States dba The United States of America and all acting under The Unanimous Declaration of Independence, all living in their individual States of the Union;

(2) United States Citizens serving the Federal Republic and its members known as State Republics (e.g., The Republic of Texas/Texas Republic) under The Constitution for the united States of America (1787). The Federal Republic was sponsored and run by the original Confederation of States doing business as the States of America.

(3) U.S. Citizens who were British-affiliated military subcontractors.

(4) And finally, citizens of the United States, employees of the Federal Civil Service.

(Employees of the Union States were sometimes called "state citizens" or "county citizens", but as they had no role in international or global jurisdictions, they were internal to each State of the Union and there is little mention of them until we get down to the level of County Government.)

After the Civil War, both the original Confederation of States (American) and the American Federal Republic (United States) were vacated.

Only the Union doing business as The United States and the Federation doing business as The United States of America remained of the American Government.

Only the British Territorial Federal Subcontractor doing business as the United States of America, Incorporated, and the Papist Municipal United States Subcontractor doing business as the United States, Incorporated, remained on the Federal Government side.

Got all that?

We were built with a six cylinder engine, and have been functioning on four.

The American States-of-States who were the members of the original Confederation have been rolled over into State Trusts and supplanted by British Territorial States-of-States pretending to be acting as our custodians and caretakers in our "absence".

The Federal Republic that was supported by and run by the original Confederation doing business as the States of America is also long gone, ever since 1861.

So, in 2024, there are no State Republics (that were State Members of the Federal Republic) and there are no United States Citizens (sometimes called American Nationals) as defined by the first Immigration and Naturalization Act.

Lately there has been a lot of confusion and people going around calling themselves "American Nationals" but this is not correct, because the American Federal Republic along with its brand of United States Citizen is long gone. Likewise, there are no State Republics for the same reason.

It's apparent that Mr. Trump and the British Territorial Military Subcontractors operating as the United States of America, Incorporated, think that they can walk in as British Territorial U.S. Citizens and "occupy" the long-vacated American Federal Republic ---- and fool everyone into thinking that this latest British Substitution Scheme is legitimate.

It's not.

It's just more British meddling, bad faith, guile, and violence.

We are still occupying our own country, thank you, and they are here illegally and unlawfully operating in Breach of Trust and in violation of their Constitution which requires "good faith" service, telling the world that we are "absent" and "in interregnum", when we are standing here staring them in the face and denouncing them for it.

The Confederation and the Federal Republic are indeed long gone, but the Federation of States is still in operation and the Union is still in operation, and we are the ones who delegated all powers to the Federal Subcontractors in the first place.

By Operation of Law, all vacated delegated powers returned to us in 1861. There was no actual war declared. And no "national emergency". There was just a lot of British guile, criminal breach of trust, illegal mercenary occupation of our country under color of law, and theft, theft, theft.

It's time for this to be recognized and brought to an end.

Any bank that hands over $60 Billion dollars worth of our credit to Ukraine in the face of this objection from us, on the basis of a vote by our erstwhile British Territorial Subcontractors and their "Congress", had better be prepared for a $240 Billion bill from us.
