

The Vanishing Act

By Anna Von Reitz

Ever wonder how things vanish? Massive things? Entire civilizations, not to mention vast business empires that just go "Pop!" ---- now you see 'em, now you don't? The Ten Tribes of Israel? Well, they didn't really vanish. They were "spiritually lost" and succumbed to the charms of Babylonian idolatry. We actually know where they went and we know where their descendants are to this day.

In the 1300's the vast Knights Templar organization folded and disappeared overnight taking the bulk of their wealth with them. A few leaders were captured and tortured and killed, most notably, Jacques de Molay, but as for the gold and thousands of others, they simply disappeared.

We know that they went to Scotland and the Isle of Mann and Malta and the Hebrides and Iceland and Norway and Russia and back to their home bases in the Middle East and Africa----and that they not only embellished the Inner City of London long after the purge of the Pope and the French King---- they continued to be Lords of the Admiralty and the Exchequer. They were on the boats to the New World along with the most ardent Spanish treasure seekers and their members swelled the ranks of the Jesuit Order.

Did they vanish, really, or have they always been hidden in plain view?

And then, there was the mammoth Dutch East India Trading Company, four or five times larger than its nearest competitor, the British East India Company---easily the most successful, most predatory, and richest commercial company on Earth, and yet, it vanished overnight. Poof!

And except for Frank O'Collins and a few other Intrepid Explorers into the realms of Utter Darkness, we would probably remain ignorant of the deals the Dutch East India Traders made with the British which allowed them to come here, to America, and act as predators let loose on our shores.

Then as now, the Dutch East India Company specialized in dealing in slaves, drugs, prostitution, money laundering, war profiteering, and every other nasty, unspeakable vice. If nothing else, we can follow their progress in the New World by the proliferation of their wares.

And now, the parasites that began their journey in Babylon 8,000 years ago and who have wandered the Earth like their Father, Cain, generation to generation, are moving on again. They have turned their faces to the sun and yet continue to see and read everything in reverse.

As crazy and unlikely as it seems, a good portion of all the ill-gotten wealth acquired from centuries of war, pillaging, and plundering, is moving to China. When the commentators woke up last week and realized that the perpetrators of all this fraud have vanished the rumors flew wildly around the globe and pole to pole.

Had they all shipped out "off world" to travel to other dimensions and galaxies?

Had they headed for underground bunkers and prepared for the worst?
It's much more prosaic than that. They all just up-ended and relocated to China, like tapeworms journeying on, host to host, they will subtly eat away the substance of China and the Chinese People and this, despite our best attempts to warn them all. The Forbidden Fruit, the Great Lie, is hard to beat.

One wonders what will happen when the world wakes up and realizes that they are gone from our shores, and gone from Europe, too. What will people make of yet another "Vanishing" and what sorts of tricks will they pull from their kit-bags upon landing in Beijing?

Will they take to silk? Learn to drink tea----again---after 300 years in New York? And what about the rest of us? Have we finally grown up enough to recognize their attempts to pit Russia and America against each other and provoke a war between their own two natural enemies?

Make no mistake--- the predatory parasites would like nothing better than to cook something up and stand back and watch us kill each other. Why? Because they are Monarchists and they always have been.

It is far easier to control a single Monarch than bamboozle 390 million separate sovereigns.

They realized early on that the American Republic and American workers actually had more in common with the Russian workers and the ideals of Russian Communism than they did with old crumbly European Monarchies----- so almost from the first, it has been the modus operandi of the Divine Right proponents to spread suspicion, fear and hatred of Russians among the Americans and suspicion and fear and hatred of Americans among the Russians.

Keeping us at each other's throats has been very convenient. It kept both young, powerful, idealistic nations busy and prevented us from noticing all that they were quietly doing to us behind our backs to benefit themselves at our mutual expense.....and even now, when they have quietly vanished, simply disappeared to their new royal palaces and set up their stock and trade behind a seawall composed of billions of Chinese bodies, they continue to prod us and hope that we will be stupid enough to oblige their sincere wish for our mutual destruction.

Sooner or later, we all have to quit being the straight men in these evil, self-interested games. Sooner or later, we have to stop doing what we are told---- especially when we are being prodded into war.
