

Planned Vatican Bankruptcy Fraud

By Anna Von Reitz

If we did the same thing, we'd go to jail.

If Pope Francis does it, not so much.

Attentive readers will realize that we have already explained this headline news:

In September two years ago, Pope Francis began circling the wagons in earnest. He had all liquid assets returned to the Vatican Bank. Once all that was done and consolidated, he made a long-planned journey to Constantinople to talk with the Patriarchs of the Eastern Church.

Amazingly, or not, all the money and liquid assets migrated as if by magic to the Eastern Church and Francis got a new office and title, "Patriarch of the West".

They are doing what they did during the Fall of Rome and the Dark Ages, transferring the power structure and the wealth of the Roman Catholic Church to Constantinople in a bid to evade bill collectors and political upheavals in Western Europe --- and not a second too soon.

Macron's fall in France and the transfer of the Church's wealth to Constantinople opens up a whole new Pandora's Box of possibilities, starting with the ability to buy off President Erdogan --- or more precisely, the ability to buy the Turkish Military and deploy them as hostile ground occupation forces in the Middle East. That has already happened since Francis hit town and reopened his treasury.

Next, France's President Macron was removed together with his Government; it has been reported that Macron refused an order from NATO to engage French forces in Ukraine, so no more Macron. But wait, because after the cheering subsidies, a worse monster waits and bides his time.
