

Visualize What You Want to See

By Anna Von Reitz

As for me, I want to see all the rotten, selfish, cruel, nasty, spiteful, small-minded criminals outta here. I don't care where they came from, or where they are going --- so long as it's away from my world.

Oh, but that's so negative!

No, it's not. It's the world I want to see, a world at peace because the criminals are gone.

Visualization is an equal opportunity endeavor. You can visualize something being and you can visualize something not being.

So instead of troubling myself with trying to work out all the ways and means of catching and punishing and restraining these characters, I prefer to color them gone.

In my mind, they are simply not here among us any more.

For the next forty days, we can repent our mistakes and hard-heartedness, and we can reshape our world in any way we wish.

So imagine this -- you no longer have to worry about murderers or thieves, wars or diseases or famines or droughts --- none of it, anymore.

You can play and splash and walk and enjoy life unfettered by fear or lack of any kind. And all you need to achieve that, is to visualize and speak what you want with all your heart.

You wish for peace on Earth? Make it so.

You wish for kindness, compassion, and sharing? Make it so.

You wish for the Earth to be renewed and cleansed, all the pollution gone? Make it so.

You wish to be surrounded by friendly honest caring people?

It's your choice. Right now. The Foundation portal is standing wide open.

We are no great shakes at figuring out how, when, where, or why, but there is one question that we are fundamentally designed to answer --- and that question is --- what?

What do you want to see? What kind of world do you want to live in? What kind of people do you want around you?

This has always been your choice, and while you have the drawing pens and color box to visualize anything you want, you also have the Big Eraser, to remove the uglies from our planet.

That's why I encouraged everyone to spend this Sunday saying no to all the things they don't want. And to actually verbalize it with thought, word, and voice. No more lies. No more cruelty. No more predators. No more cheats. No more thugs. No more evil.... period, at all.

Make it abundantly clear what you don't want, and then, give voice to what you do want.

So stop visualizing war and famine and disease and all the worries, problems, and threats that the BBC is selling like gum drops each and every day. Just bypass all that, and go straight for the mark.

It's not your job to answer what happens to all these depraved monsters or to worry about where they are going or how they are going to be rounded up and taken away.

Just say the word and imagine your world without them.

Truly, it can be done in a single night, and all those who are crooked and cruel, who think only of themselves, who plot the destruction of others, who are not worthy to be called men --- you can simply wake up in the morning and find that they are all gone.

My favorite visualization is that I wake up one morning and the birds are chirping and the sun is shining and everything is at peace and washed clean. A brand new day. And not a single nasty crooked mean-spirited thug is anywhere to be seen.

They've all been swept away like dry leaves and I no longer remember their faces or names.

They are simply gone. No muss. No fuss. No drama. No blood. No struggle. Just say the word.

It's not my business to judge them or hang them or incarcerate them. I don't want to waste (any more of) my time and energy dealing with them. I just want them gone.

So that's what I visualize, a world full of good and peaceful people, happy and healthy animals, everyone rejoicing, free and unafraid at last.

Attached is what we distributed and voiced at our General Assembly meeting yesterday.
