

Well, Get Ready.....

Anna Von Reitz

The government shutdown is still ongoing, it's just not shut down in quite the same way. The US, INC., is still in the process of being audited and dismembered, the U.S.A. Inc., is still pursuing its agenda, but it's all for show and to make a few bucks.

Forty years in the wilderness, forty days of deluge, forty, forty, forty, forty.... if Grandma sat here and listed all the times in the Bible that someone had to endure for forty days, forty months, or forty years your butts would get tired waiting to hear the end of it.

So we've had forty days of government shutdown, and you think there is nothing to the forty day limit? You think that they aren't trying, knowingly, willfully to --- as Q always says, make it "biblical"?

They've been trying to pull off a Do-It-Yourself fulfillment of Biblical Prophecy since the September 11th "holocaust", right down to the Cedars and Sycamores.

But why?

Obviously, they don't actually believe in the Bible and have zero confidence that God is going to show up and orchestrate the fulfillment of all the End Time prophecies himself.... so they are just playing the script out and doing it for him.... and the reason is clear enough.

They wrote the script or borrowed it from other people who wrote the script, and they are tired of the same old play. They want to fulfill the Bible Story, so they can close the lid on it, say, there, it was all fulfilled and we are done with it.

No more waiting for Jesus and streets of gold.

The child-like fable aspects have grown tiresome, embarrassing.

So they want to finish off the "Christian Era", give everyone a satisfying ending, and move on.

They've got plenty of UFOs and alien races and cosmic history to peddle. You will find out that Star Wars, complete with Light Sabers and "Jedi" was a lot more real than you ever gave it credit for, but they will also feed you a lot of baloney.

Mr. Trump is sticking to his "Hebrew fulfillment theme" right down to the "ballroom" for 999. This goes all the way back to Samson and Delilah, and they aren't going to stop.

We have the lemmings, the cliffs, and the sea.... the stage is all set, except for the latest disturbing development, with Africa awakened and standing against Israel over the genocide in Gaza.

That was not foreseen, not in the Bible, not in Whitehall, not in DC.

One of the British Cabinet Ministers today was expressing how "tiresome" the "old situation in the Middle East is".

They know it's their fault, but see no point in admitting it or apologizing or trying to set things right.

Better, in their view, to brazen it out, stiff upper lip, chin held high.

Grandpa Jim would rather argue with a mule than a Brit, and rather have supper with a badger --- and that's from a man who knew mules, Brits, and badgers well.

They'd rather describe the murderous situation in Gaza as "boring", "tedious", and even oddly, as "Oriental", as if the Palestinians came from China or Japan and were living in Israel by mistaken choice, as if they might just pack a valise and go home to the foothills of Mt. Fuji and escape the present nastiness.

Or, alternatively, pejoratively, as if "Oriental" implied a hysterical temperament, and the Palestinians were just "making too much of it". A bunch of complainers! Only two million people left homeless and 48,000 dead, most of them women and children.

To put this in perspective, we lost 55,000 in twelve years of senseless mercenary conflict in Vietnam, and only God knows how many Vietnamese were killed.

When I asked politely if massacres usually bore them, or just this one in Gaza, they blanched a little, hurriedly glanced away, looking like some rare bilious hybrid of a lizard, a pelican, and a goat.

My own distaste for genocide was clearly unexpected and required some nose powder, both on and in the nose. Aren't we all jolly all the time here, Americans and Brits, so chummy-chummy, well, no, not necessarily.

For just a moment, I am transported back to my days in the Toad Hole, my basement office with the computer on a workbench, and file folders stacked on a laundry cart. I can feel my husband standing behind me shaking his head, one hand on my shoulder.

"Come to bed, honey. It's the Brits. You'll never be through with them."

And so it seems, nobody is ever done with them.

Blink your eyes and they are back again, spinning some new tale, pushing some new agenda, always skipping over the "rough spots" like right now.

Edit, bleep, edit.... Gaza what? What happened in Gaza?

If it was up to the British Government, you'd never know about Gaza, much less be able to discuss it. It reflects poorly on them and their colonialist thuggery. They'd much rather talk about invasive weed species and Anthony Blount.

But even the British are stepping back now. A billion --with a "b" Africans, the whole continent arrayed against them and their dalliance with Netanyahu?

Perhaps, just maybe, it's time to up-end and fish for trout? You can see it in their faces, the shock, the quick glance toward the door. They can't ignore Africa. Not an organized Africa. All the fun and games they had planned for the Middle East may have to be reconsidered -----and over.

Watch Donald Trump over the next few days. You will see that he is changed and wears a thoughtful look, a considering look. The entire game has changed.

The whole world power balance shifted this week and will never be the same. Generations will look back and mark this November.

The entry of Africa bodes well for peace, not just for Gaza, but the whole Middle East.

Granna

See this article and over 5600 others on Anna's website here: www.annavonreitz.com
To support this work look for the Donate button on this website.