

International Public Notice: Why the Brits? Why the Romans?

By Anna Von Reitz

We are forced by the heavy weight of historical precedent to ask -- why the Brits? Why the Romans?

The Brits have been the muscle for the Roman Church for over a thousand years, and that is definitely part of the reason that the Brits are always at the bottom of every dog pile, but why do they so readily, even eagerly, adapt to deceit and spread crime and war and discord everywhere they go? And always hidden behind such a nice facade of reasonableness and egalitarian sentiment?

We have pondered this question at length.

From the start, we have known that what we are facing is a matter of crime--- especially crimes of force and fraud and impersonation. The situation has nothing to do with black against white or Jew against Muslim or anything of that kind at all. No, actually, it has to do with two other things -- slavery and elitism.

Britain, like the Holy Roman Empire, has supported itself by enslaving others, and also like the Holy Roman Empire, they have been fine with that, because of a wholly unsupported sense of their own superiority.

They consider themselves so superior to other men that it is their right to prey upon and lie to and rob and cheat and steal from and even murder others outside their social caste systems -- and this is especially true for anyone who happens to be a different color or who espouses a different religion.

This elitism is founded in both cases on the existence of a strict social hierarchy both within British society and the Roman Church.

They both embrace caste systems. The British caste system locks in at birth, while the Church caste system is at least a little bit merit-based, even though the definition of "merit" is twisted.

In Britain to this day, the caste system is obvious. A man is marked and stuck in his social strata by the way he speaks, the words he uses, the clothes he wears, his posture, his haircut, and even the way he thinks. The British Upper Crust is internationally famous for its arrogance and for being snooty and immoral; this is what stands as "noble" in the British caste system.

Such a system breeds contempt for the rest of humanity in the so-called nobility, and also sets up a system in which those who aspire to a better life have a bad example to follow. Monkey see, monkey do. If it's good enough for Prince Andrew, why shouldn't the local lorry driver aspire to diddling little girls and getting away with it?

Even if the Brits are quite literally enslaved by their corrupt and hidebound social system, they cling to it, as they cling to every other tradition both good and bad --- including but not limited to the practice of enslavement.

Let's be very clear. Both slavery and peonage have been outlawed worldwide since 1926.

This ban and their own public support of it, has not been sufficient to overcome centuries of the British Navy's press-ganging of children as young as ten into its service, nor the Church's black market trading in sin and souls, via modern day Indulgences, the selling and trading of souls via baptismal certificates, and the selling of intellectual and labor assets belonging to others via the trading of birth certificates.

The Brits and the Roman Church, while outwardly supporting this official worldwide prohibition against slavery and peonage, have evaded obeying this prohibition by gratuitously "redefining" living men as things --- corporate franchises, estate trusts, and most recently, transhumans.

China and India and other nations with large labor forces have been prohibited from any "abuse" of their workers via enslavement or peonage, and both Britain and Rome have sanctimoniously condemned any whisper of wrong-doing against Chinese workers --- at the same time that they have impersonated and enslaved and reduced workers in the western world to peonage at best.

What do you call it, when a worker is ten to a hundred times more productive, and doesn't get a raise in almost fifty years?

As always, the British-Romano system has been a system of "not as I do, but as I say". The Perpetrators have used every trick in the book to reap the profits of enslavement and peonage, while hypocritically condemning these same practices by any party that could be considered a competitor.

These gross hypocrites have apparently excused themselves for this using the old Roman Civil Law Dictum, "Let him who will be deceived, be deceived." and attributed their wealth and power to their natural superiority as fraud artists, bullies, and hypocrites.

The latest British PsychoDrama is instructive. Their Labour Party Prime Minister earlier in his career volunteered to defend an African immigrant who committed gross crimes against humanity and individual people in Rwanda and continued to commit crimes once he arrived in England; this man's son has been caught and accused of carrying on the family tradition via the murder of three little English girls in Grade School.

This has finally hit a nerve with the British Public and touched off a firestorm of outrage throughout the country, so much so that Keir Starmer's hold on the Labour Party is coming unglued and his status among the diplomats he relies on has sunk to new lows as respect for his personal judgment wanes.

One must ask, how has a man who would defend such cruelty and depravity, and follow it up with mass immigration policies that are crippling Britain's economy and impoverishing and further endangering its people, come to power in the first place?

Where are the sieves and balances in the British political system that should prevent such an outcome as Boris Johnson or Keir Starmer coming to power?

We are fairly sure that British Elections, like American Elections, have been undermined and hacked, so that men who had other agendas than the good of their country and countrymen came to power.

How else can anyone explain immigration policies that have resulted in a massive, insupportable strain on Britain's already struggling social welfare programs, and allowed a clash of cultures on British streets and in British schools that has resulted in murder and mayhem that otherwise wouldn't even be present?

Idiocy, criminality, and impractical ideology have been the order of the day for at least twenty years.

From the deep outrage and pain being expressed by individual Brits on social media and in the press, we can hope that this insanity has finally reached a breaking point, and that the pain of letting go of outworn traditions is balanced by a new sense of self-worth and self-preservation.

Brits from Bath to Northumberland appear to be waking up and saying, these are our children, our streets, our country, and our world. Who the hell are you, saying that you "represent" us?

While Keir Starmer and his ilk have been busy trying to redefine Britain as anything but British, we've had our own version of this criminality and betrayal personified as Barack Obama, Joe Biden, Nancy Pelosi and Kamala Harris. They have all striven to create division and economic and social disaster, injustice, and self-service carried to an obscene degree.

None of these politicians are actually working for nor improving the lives of the working people, nor any constituency that they might logically or naturally have; they have been single-mindedly pursuing policies and agendas that have only harmed the people they are supposed to represent, as demonstrated by their participation in and profiting from the fraud of bank usury, fiat currencies, the fraudulent imposition of mortgages and taxes owed by corporations, and failure to pursue an equitable distribution of corporate profit from labor productivity gains over the past fifty years.

If these people represent "Labour" or the poor members of society by any definition, we don't know what that definition is.

Apparently, President Trump has ginned up a new corporate name and structure in England, calling itself: United States of America, LLC. We have yet to locate whatever they are calling "the United States" -- Incorporated, or LLC or LLP, or, or, or....

We are spending less time considering the Roman hierarchy and its detrimental forms and habits, because their "government" isn't actually a government, either, and the billion people they represent worldwide are unaware that they are being counted as worshippers of Mammon and that their Church is in the control of members of the Money Cult.

Like the millions of Americans who were being counted as "Federal Dual Citizens" behind their backs and without their knowledge or consent, billions of Catholics have been counted as worshippers of demons and idols and false and foreign "gods" in the same exact way. If this isn't what you want, time to stand up.

Despite many alarming signs and signals and obvious betrayals and outright warnings from people as senior and reliable as now Ex-Archbishop Carlo Maria Vigano, the members of the Church, bound by its peculiar brand of elitism, have been even slower on the uptake and on taking meaningful action than their counterparts in the equally hidebound British caste system.

Suffice it to say that when the Vatican refers to "slaves of Christ" and "bondsmen of Christ", that should be taken literally. The Roman Church and the Roman Civil Government with which it is affiliated, have always relied upon the value of slaves and slave labor to support their respective hierarchies. There is a reason --- a supremely venal economic reason --- that the Pope's Federal Civil Service fought alongside the Southern Confederacy during our so-called Civil War.

After a lifetime of dedication to the scriptures and doctrines of the Roman Church, a lifetime of work for the same Church, Vigano has been cast out for causing a "Schism" that he did not create, but merely observed.

The actual schism has been caused by the obvious and disastrous leadership problems that have plagued the Church and such large and odd changes as the disappearance of the Office of the Roman Pontiff, the whole circumstance of the "Pope Emeritus", the appearance of the "Patriarch of the West". and such bizarre statements from Pope Francis as telling people that God is Lucifer.

We can only hope that priests and prelates and other bishops and cardinals within the Church as well as the entire Church membership wakes up and takes back control of what is supposed to be their church, not a church devoted to Baal, Lucifer, Mammon, and Baphomet. To do so, will require the destruction of the hierarchy that has long ruled and controlled everything within the Church, a mass spiritual uprising that literally refuses to go along with a Pope and senior leadership which is betraying the simplest tenets of the faith.

Over a billion Catholics must now ask -- is this our church? Or Lucifer's?

We send our heartfelt condolences to former Archbishop Vigano for the injustice he has suffered and our hope that he will live to see the restoration of the Church he has served and loved.

The problems that plague both the British Isles and the Roman Church all stem from the social caste systems they stubbornly enshrine to their own detriment, and from the self-aggrandizing elitism that results.

Unfortunately, their problems become our problems, as they strive continuously to foist off their venal economic and banking practices and their social caste systems on the rest of the world.
