

Popular, But Wrong Theories

By Anna Von Reitz

There has been a lot of scrambling over recent weeks as millions of alarmed Americans try to make sense of the world. I am reminded of myself thirty years ago -- the sudden alarm, the feeling of helplessness, the anger, the denial, the acceptance, the commitment.

Finding out the truth about America's condition is like a sock in the gut. And many people are feeling their way forward, unaided by much more than their own observation that, "Hey, something's wrong!"

See our book, "You Know Something's Wrong When....An American Affidavit of Probable Cause" by Anna Maria Riezinger and James Clinton Belcher.

If everyone read that one source, they'd have a solid, simple, and readable recount of what's wrong and why. Complete with great cartoons.

It wouldn't answer every question, but it would set the stage for understanding where we are and how we got here. Like identifying the illness you have, it is oddly reassuring to define the problem and begin grappling with it.

I've asked every State Assembly to develop a library of resources for their members to use, so there should be "loaner" copies available.

Absent that kind of common grounding, various groups have sprung up around the country and some of them are greasing their wheels by making outlandish claims about me and espousing theories we've already explored and debunked. Here's a sampling:

1. The Union States Theory. The Union States form the Union of States called The United States. They are the true sovereign Nation-States. Every one of our Union

States has three components: the land, the soil, and the people. The people comprise the nation, and the physical land and soil comprise the state.

So far, so good. Everyone is in agreement.

However, the theory then goes that because these are the true sovereign states, they are the logical place to start the recoupment of our country.

There is one big problem with this theory, and that is mistaking where we are.

The people have been impersonated and human trafficked off their native land and soil. We've been deliberately and cruelly transported by our own employees into the foreign international jurisdiction of the sea.

Proponents of the Union States Theory assume that we can just instantly step back onto the soil and reclaim the Union States because the registrations and other legal practices that unlawfully converted our political status are based on fraud.

It's a fine theory, but there are some problems with it. Most of all, in our opinion, it allows the rats to escape. Certainly, organized crime and fraud have been practiced against us, but if we deny that it happened, we have no basis to complain or reclaim anything. Perhaps worse, we are obliged to live in a "State of Denial" rather than a State of the Union.

It did happen. We were impersonated and human trafficked by our own employees. We were defrauded and mischaracterized, robbed, beaten, jailed under false pretenses, subjected to laws and bills of attainder, and not a small number of us were murdered. These are facts.

So, we accept the facts and deal with them as they lay.

We come back to our native birthright via the land, moving from the international jurisdiction of the sea to the corollary international jurisdiction of the land, and from the land jurisdiction we reclaim the National soil jurisdiction and repopulate our Union States one county at a time.

Now there can be no doubt that we have "returned" and all aspects of logic and provenance have been satisfied. We don't propose to just spring up like mushrooms after rain and try to ignore the two clearinghouse receipts that would otherwise bind us.

2. The World Trust Theory: This theory holds that we are lost (and those subscribing to this theory may be) and that whoever finds us and rescues us, owns us. This is akin to the traditional idea that if someone saves your life, you owe them your life.

A more sober examination proves that all our lives emanate from an unknown and miraculous source and that we all owe our lives to that source apart from any other circumstance; any incidental salvation provided by men is only an affirmation of the life that we jointly and severally share, and carries no obligation of servitude.

Gratitude yes, servitude no.

Examination also proves that all such "salvage" was self-interested and unnecessary on the part of the British Crown and the World Trust.

Imagine that someone claims that you were having a heart attack, pounces on you, knocks you out, calls an ambulance, takes you to the hospital, and then hands you the bill for all this service --- when in fact you were perfectly fine and weren't having any difficulty at all.

That's the kind of salvage operation that has been taking place in this country for over a century and a half.

Again, think of it this way, the Creator owns you. The World Trust and the various Governments are the equivalent of "people rustlers" just like cattle rustlers; they want to change your brand and claim that they own you instead.

Seeing this, and seeing what they were trying to do via the use of their pernicious language and paper boondoggle, I employed their own tools against them, removed myself and took my proven "title" and claimed up all assets of this country, rolling everything into my private estate trust as Fiduciary for The United States of America --- our unincorporated Federation of States.

In this way, they are deprived of their prey and our claims against them are preserved. We are God's children, not the creatures of their imaginations.

I have published my Irrevocable Will returning the same property grant back to every other American who reclaims their birthright.

So yes, I methodically reclaimed and fought the fight in every jurisdiction of the law, in the air, on the sea, on the land, and brought it all back to the soil --- repopulating the Federation and the Union States, both.

We are all, purportedly, donors of our property and estates to the World Trust, and when we act as donors instead of trying to act as beneficiaries, we each regain control of the situation and dissolve the Trust.

It melts away like the Wicked Witch of the West.

People hearing all this for the first time don't know who to believe and naturally fear what is unknown. The good news is that I returned all right, title, and interest to the living people of this world; the "bad" news is that you must impose your will on your public employees and learn to self-govern.

You have to run your own boat. You can't just leave it on autopilot.
