

The Biggest Lies

By Anna Von Reitz

Children lie because they don't know any better, but as you get older, most people stop lying --both to themselves and to others. There are, of course, many exceptions. and many adults continue to lie because they think it profits them in some way.

Bill Clinton: "I did not have sex with that woman."

Those of us who have arrived at the next stage of maturity, know that it does no good to lie, because the Truth, in its entirety, is always known. So, as a practical matter, there is no use in lying. That's why we don't do it.

Barack Obama: "I'm going to cut the Federal budget."

It really is laughable at times, and yet, people who believe lies act upon them.

Think of the millions of people who have voted for politicians to run their lives and ruin their country, simply because they believed lies?

And then failed to check back on voting records and do performance evaluations?

So they continue to believe and vote for the same politicians who have been lying through their teeth the whole time.

US Senator Lisa Murkowski: "Of course, I'm a Republican."

Billions of people worldwide give up over half of their earnings under conditions of force and duress, yet somehow, they believe that they are free.

They pay property taxes and mortgages, yet they think they own their homes.

NIST: "The World Trade Center towers collapsed because of office fires ignited by jet fuel."

Just recently, I was accused of lying.

A neophyte researcher went on the internet and couldn't find something I referenced.

He was looking for an action undertaken by the Continental Congress affecting the International Jurisdiction of the Several States--- in Municipal Government records. No joke.

That's like looking for Acts of Parliament in the archives of the City of Pittsburgh, Ohio.

Even after I explained his mistake, he remained convinced that I'd lied to him.

So, it's not just a matter of being lied to by others, it's also a matter of lying to ourselves --- failing to admit our mistakes and limitations. How else does his incompetence become my lie?

Pope Francis: "We must obey the UN."

[I just won't mention that I own 'the' UN.]

We discover, much to our amazement, that our two foreign Subcontractors, the Queen and the Pope, have been colluding together to create a perpetual "war" on our soil.

This is amazing on three counts.

First, it's amazing because a shot hasn't been fired in this "war" in a hundred and fifty years, plus, the whole thing was an illegal mercenary conflict and not a war to begin with.

Second, it's amazing because they are our Employees and have no reason or right to be fighting on our soil.

Third, it's amazing because the Queen works for the Pope as his Overseer of the Commonwealths, and the British Territorial Government that is supposed to be one side of this non-existent "war" is a Commonwealth. So the Pope is fighting against the Pope, and both the Pope and the Queen are profiting from this at the expense of their Employers.

I'll admit this is a jaw-dropper, but it is the truth nonetheless.

So, yes, it can be hard to make a distinction between truth and lies, simply because the truth is unbelievable.

Who could believe that the Pope is the one ultimately responsible for all this destruction and criminality? That he is literally causing it to exist?

As he, the Pope, owns all these corporations and controls the charters issued by the Holy See, he could, presumably, pull the plug on the whole shooting match, and end the bogus "war" with the flick of a pen and a whisper in Lizzie's ear.

And what about us? Why are we standing here allowing our EMPLOYEES to cause us trouble?

It is unbelievable. It's also true.

So, what to do in a world where truth can appear to be a lie, and a lie can appear to be the truth?

Perhaps the answer lies in science and mathematics--- the Natural and Universal Laws.

Perhaps, too, there is a reason that this video showed up in my in-box this morning as I was ruminating about lies. It exposes the Biggest Whopper of them all:

Remember our meditation to break apart the Great Seals that are interfering with the flow of energy on this planet? The Great Palatine Seal in Rome is battered, but still standing. It's time to pull it apart.

Maybe that will finally convince the Pope?

The Seal on Bardsey Island is below the waves, but needs to vanish entirely.

Just imagine untying knots, releasing all the things that bind us, letting go of the past, letting go of selfishness and fear, being truly free and truly honest and truly healthy and truly loved.

Because you are.
