

Did a State Representative in the past try to set up a Trust Fund designed as a Pension Fund to directly benefit the taxpayer? Yes.

I came across this information today in 2021.

In 2000, NH State Rep. Marple from the Merrimack District of NH introduced HOUSE BILL 1446-FN

<https://www.gencourt.state.nh.us/legislation/2000/HB1446.html> (CITA now known as TRFA)

He also introduced a bill per "silence" making a public official guilty of fraud if a government employee was aware of bribery but kept silent.

Bribery has a wide range of meanings which could include covertly moving, investing of public funds for personal financial gain contrary to direct public benefit.

Rep. Marple died in December of 2019 at the age of 88.

I note: Back from the 1940's / 50's until 1988, New Hampshire only on the State Government level, had a principle of operation whereby 85% of the State Government's operating budget was required to be met from the return of an investment trust fund that was established for that purpose and this requirement was accomplished and strictly adhered to.

In 1988 or 1989, under pressure from other National local governments and greedy internal forces, the NH State law requirement for this fund was changed so that this specific trust fund could be and was disbanded. The fund in so many words was setting a bad example for other large local governments who wished to take revenue from the public, rather than serve the public's interests in directly giving financial benefit back.

The TRFA (Tax Retirement Fund Association) in 2014 started the steps to create a National Home office whereby the organization would then be established, staffed, and in operation to consult with and educate all local governments and the population per Fiduciary Trust Funds created to offset taxation with the intent of ending taxation.

To get this done required application of serious financial resources. To start, one person from Texas who was on the CAFR1 National email list for several years allocated the start-off funds. 24-acres of property was acquired in Gallup, NM, a central location just off of I-40. The location was then fenced in, entrance wall and gate built, and road path cut to the top butte where the National Home Office would be built. An architect drafted the plans and blueprints for construction. This was all done by the end of 2015.

I found out I was responsible for a very big miscalculation. In 2014, I let the email list of CAFR1 know that a backer from Texas had stepped in to start the TRFA National headquarters. Being that I had worked since 1999 for national and International disclosure of local government's CAFR combined with how government was operating outside of the view of the public, and taxation could be ended, I presumed hundreds of financial heavyweights hearing the TRFA was underway would step forward saying: "OK Walter, great! What do you need to get the job done?" I note that for years prior to this point, everyone I spoke to, or that contacted me from the numerous radio programs done or articles they read, told me in so many words: "This is the most important and best thing that could happen for the people, the economy, and this country, bless you for working on making this happen."

From 2015 to present, financial contributions from the population dried up to virtually non-existent. In 2015, $450 came in and now in 2021, $170 for the year. I did not do any fund drives over that time period by intent. I said to myself, many from the population know what's at stake, and if they want the TRFA National Headquarters to happen, the ones with strong financial resources will contact me saying: "What finances do you need Walter to get the job done?" From 2015 to now in 2021, not one phone call or letter was received by me in that respect.

I do note that independently I approached a good friend who was a financial heavyweight, a Gene Valentine who owned Financial West Group and he under his network had about 6 billion dollars under management. He and his brother came and visited me for a weekend in his motor-home, we discussed what would be needed to complete the TRFA Headquarters, get it staffed, with an operating budget for two-years, and asked him if he could raise the funding. I offered him an 8.5% return, ownership of all assets until principle and interest were repaid, and he said: "Not a problem Walter, yes I will make it happen." The agreed upon funds was 12-million dollars and Gene could raise that in a few phone calls.

Mr. Valentine then headed off to Reno, NV where he was building his new National Headquarters for Financial West Group. Well, I found out that 21-days latter after leaving my home he was found fully dressed on his bed dead. He was cremated a week latter, no real investigation took place as to the cause of his death, and even his personal website was taken down a week after his death. Financial West Group was then dissolved. From archive.org his personal website that was taken down a week after his death, it can be viewed here.

I have paid the annual property taxes on the Gallup property each year (about $800 per year) and made repairs to the property when needed, but waiting on that contact call from another financial heavyweight to support the TRFA

Headquarters in making it happen has left me a very lonely person. To complete the TRFA Headquarters it has become very obvious to myself under the current circumstances, it will take a miracle, or getting the resources personally, so I go back to probably it will take a miracle.

Again I will reiterate: I made a very big miscalculation. Expecting after having reached tens of millions of people over a 20-year period with disclosure and all saying this is the best thing that could happen for the people and country, per Financial heavyweights, exclude the TX backer and Gene Valentine, silence...

The population goes to great lengths to entertain themselves and be entertained as government increases the take each and every year. I will express emphatically: I never had the intent to "entertain" the population, but to benefit the population in the best way imaginable, ending taxation which would create a thriving economy of no equal.

I know for a fact that if I had spent the same massive time and energy since 1998 until present in operating an add-revenue generating YouTube channel with insignificant but very good entertainment clutter, or established a lemonade chain, my personal net worth would be well over 20-million dollars by now. But alas, I chose a different path to follow and have not deviated from that path to present. One of the flaws I may have is: I do believe in miracles.

Truly Yours,
