

Deliberate "Misunderstanding" About The Articles of Confederation

By Anna Von Reitz

Use your heads.

Pay attention to the American Government that is intact and functioning -- not the portions of it that were blown away back in 1860.

The actual progression of the development of our government reads like this:

July 1776 --- The United Colonies create the United States

September 1776 -- the United States adopts a Federation: The United States of America

January 1777 -- Discussion begins concerning a Confederation

November 1777 -- Articles of Confederation sent to the States for ratification

February 1781 -- Articles of Confederation are ratified

March 1, 1781 -- Articles of Confederation take effect

As everyone can see, the Union doing business as the United States and the Federation of States both pre-date the Confederation by almost five years, and after the Articles were ratified, what happened?

Both the Union doing business as the United States and the Federation of States doing business as The United States of America continued to do business.

The only thing that changed is that a new entity called the States of America, the Confederation, began doing business, specifically in Maritime jurisdiction.

So the United States didn't go away and neither did The United States of America --- they were not "replaced" by the Confederation; instead, the Confederation was another, second, instrumentality of the United States.

You have a Federation and you have a Confederation. Both. Both of these instrumentalities were formed by the United States which was formed by the United Colonies, and the expressed purpose on the part of the United States was to provide itself with non-competitive representation in foreign jurisdictions.

This is because the United States (after 1851, The United States) holds the National Soil Jurisdiction, which the Founders deliberately isolated from foreign interference.

The United States of America handled all international and global business for the United States from 1776 to 1781.

After the States of America, otherwise known as the Confederation was ratified, the global (Maritime Commerce) business was split off from the duties of The United States of America and became the responsibility of the States of America.

The States of the Union are the Members of the Federation: Ohio, Maine, New York, Florida, etc.

The States of States (business organizations serving the States) are the members of the Confederation: The State of Ohio, The State of Maine, The State of New York, The State of Florida, and so on.

And so it remained until 1787, when the Confederation spawned its own instrumentality, known as the Federal Republic, which operated under the Federal Constitution known as The Constitution for the united States of America.

Notice that the name of the Confederation -- "States of America" is identical to the nomenclature in "The Constitution for the united States of America".

The States agreed to have the States-of-States and their Confederation manage the day-to-day business affairs of the Federal Republic, which was made responsible for exercising the 18 enumerated delegated "Powers" on behalf of the States..

But Notice the Chain of Delegation of Power: all the Powers flow from the States to the United States (after 1851, The United States), then to The United States of America, then to the States of America, and finally, to the Federal Republic.

Notice that the States are the only true sovereign entities. The Union dba United States, the Federation dba The United States of America and the Confederation dba States of America all perform work for and are empowered by the Several States.

Everything worked fine from 1787 until 1860 when the Southern States-of-States -- members of the original Confederation walked out, and left the Confederation without the quorum necessary to conduct business.

As a result, the Confederation could no longer operate and neither could the Federal Republic which was overseen and funded by the Confederation.

The Constitution for the united States of America went dormant along with the Confederation and the Federal Republic, awaiting a Reconstruction that never happened.

Meantime, what happened to the United States and its Federation of States doing business as The United States of America?

Neither one was ever involved in the American Civil War which was fought entirely by the ex-Members of the original, broken Confederation and the other (foreign British and Papal) Federal Subcontractors.

The Northern States-of-States and the British Territorial Federal Subcontractors working under The Constitution of the United States of America formed "the Union" while the Southern States-of-States that broke off from the Confederation joined with the Municipal United States (Holy See) working under The Constitution of the United States to form the Confederate States of America.

We all know how that turned out.

All that remains of the original American Government are the States, the Union of States doing business as The United States (since 1851) and The United States of America, our Federation of States.

In 1851 the original name of the United States was formalized as The United States, while the Municipal Government working under The Constitution of the United States, continued to call itself "the United States" --- thus creating a confusion between itself and the original Union of States doing business as "the United States" from 1776 to 1851 when the nomenclature changed.

A similar confusion exists concerning the original Union of States forming the United States in 1776 and "the Union" formed by the Northern States-of-States in 1860.

But we are not here to be confused. We are here to be enlightened by the facts and our own ability to observe the facts --- chief among them:

The States created the Federation and the Confederation and only the sovereign States have the power and authority to reconstruct the Confederation.

The Confederation created, directed, and funded the Federal Republic, and without the Confederation, the only entity competent and having proven standing to operate the Federal Republic is The United States of America, our unincorporated Federation of States.

Why do we deduce that?

The United States of America conducted all international and global business for the United States from 1776 to 1781; obviously, the creation of the Confederation was a convenience, but not necessary. Likewise, the reconstruction of the Confederation would be a convenience, but not necessary for the Federation to run the Federal Republic by assuming the contract and resuming operations under The Constitution for the United States of America.

All these claims by incorporated organizations are rendered invalid by the fact of their incorporation under the auspices of foreign governments. Currently, the Government of India has unwisely chosen to allow the incorporation of a commercial entity calling itself "The United States of America, Incorporated" --- which is an infringement upon our venerable trademarks and an attempted impersonation of our unincorporated Federation of States to which we object.

It's time for everyone concerned to figure out the difference between incorporated and unincorporated business entities, to know what "impersonation" and crimes of impersonation are, and for the Principals responsible for this Mess to stop obfuscating and trying to manipulate the situation into something to benefit themselves.

They have benefited themselves at the expense of their Employers and Employees alike for 162 years as of this writing, and that is more than enough.
