

Why Is The Rest of the World Angry?

By Anna Von Reitz

Basically, it's because the [Territorial] United States went stark raving bonkers and attempted to absolutely control and dictate the financial and business affairs of all the other countries in the world.

They were dictating who could do business with whom, what currencies they could use to conduct business, how much they could spend with trading partners--- you name it, and the [Territorial] United States was trying to control everyone else's markets and micro-managing business affairs of the entire world.

So they forced all these other countries to band together in opposition to this oppression and suppression in restraint of trade and to form new alliances and new banks and new banking systems.

And what else would we expect them to do?
